DANCED IN THE NEW.

Germans Have a Jolly New Year Celebration.

Gesang and Turn Verein Hall presented a lively spectacle to the onlooker Monday evening as the members of the society and their friends to the number of three hundred assembled to dance the old year out and the new year in.

A short entertainment consisting of vocal and instrumental music was given in the early evening, after which the merry dancers took possession of the floor and held it until the wee small hours of the morning. The fun was fast and furious and at the intervals of the dance the funmakers adjourned to the banquet rooms to partake of the good things provided by the generous hosts. At midnight the orchestra broke out in a perfect fusillade of music during which the entire party rushed around the hall wishing each other many Happy New Years.

N. H. Guttman furnished the music. The committee, to which great credit is due for the successful issue of the affair, consisted of Geo. Richter, president of the society; Herman Lenke, the recording secretary, and Messrs. Myer, Bender and Dyrier.

Beginning the New Year Right.

The big Newark dry-goods firm of Heath & Drake start the new year of 1895 by increasing their facilities of doing an immense business in various ways. One of these is by introducing themselves to the people of Plainfield through the columns of The Daily Press. On our last page today is the initial announcement of Heath & Drake, who at this time every year have what may be termed an honest closing out. When they say that prices on various lines of goods have been reduced our readers may accept the statement as fact. They are judicious advertisers, and careful to state nothing they will not carry out to the letter. Heath & Drake are pleasant people to deal with profitably.

Sons of Veteran Dance.

The first reception and dance of John Hand Camp, No. 28, S. of V., held New Year's Eve in the Olympia, was a great success. About sixty persons were present and all enjoyed the excellent programme. The music was furnished by Mr. Guttman. The committee in charge, Willard V. Sutton, Charles F. Stephens and Cyrus Moore, served refreshments about midnight, after which part second of the order of dance was followed out. It was nearly 4 a. m. when the dancers left for home, and all felt well pleased with the evening's entertainment.

Queen City Elects.

The following officers were elected at the regular session of Queen City Lodge No. 226, I. O. O. F., Monday evening:

N. G.—Frank G. Smith.
V. G.—Alfred Barber.
Rec. Sec.—James D. Anderson.
Permanent Secretary—Henry S. Hoffman.
Treasurer—J. P. Allis.

A large number of brothers was present and several interesting speeches were made for the good of the order after the election. District Deputy Grand Master Staman and staff will install the newly elected officers Monday evening, Jan. 14.

Fife and Drum Dance.

The eighth grand dance of the I. F. and D. Corps at Central Hall, New Year's Eve, was a very pleasant affair, and reflected great credit on the efficient committee of arrangements, which consisted of H. C. Ackerman, L. B. Bodine, A. Allen, D. V. Force and W. W. Cook. Refreshments were served during the evening. Samuel D. Frazee furnished the music. Dancing was enjoyed until a late hour.

Death of Veteran Snow.

Constable Wm. R. Mattox left for Morristown today to take charge of the body of Lew Mattox's father-in-law, A. D. Snow, an old army veteran who was taken to the asylum about a year ago by his guardian, Captain Frank Hubbard. The funeral services will be held in Newark.

Bowling for the Trophy.

Plainfield and Cranford will meet for the first time this season Thursday night on the Cranford alleys, in the tourney for the Elizabeth Journal trophy.

The Journal says that "Watters of Plainfield is said to be determined to win the county individual championship. He is a sure bowler, and has a great record for tournaments".

Anyone who has children will rejoice with L. B. Mulford, of Plainfield, N. J. His little boy, five years of age, was sick with croup. For two days and nights he tried various remedies recommended by friends and neighbors. He says: "I thought sure I would lose him. I had seen Chamberlain's Cough Remedy advertised and thought I would try it as a last hope and am happy to say that after two doses he slept until morning. I gave it to him next day and a cure was effected. I keep this remedy in the house now and as soon as any of my children show signs of croup I give it to them and that is the last of it." 25 and 50 cents bottles for sale at Reynolds's Pharmacy. T. S. Armstrong, Manage

THE TYLER RECEPTION.

The New Year Charmingly Ushered in 'Mid Roses and Laurel.

Among the many social functions of the season none will be more pleasantly remembered by those who were present than the New Year's reception and dance given by Mrs. Mason W. Tyler at her beautiful home, 525 West Seventh street, Monday afternoon and evening.

Throughout the house the art of the floral decorator was in evidence, transforming the beautiful rooms into bowers of green intermingled with clusters of American Beauties, Jacqueminots, and pinks.

The parlors were garlanded with laurel, which hung in tasteful profusion from archway and wall. Huge vases filled with pinks and roses, whose sweet odor filled the house, graced mantelpiece and table; and passing through the rooms to large library the guests were charmed with the pretty array of greens which everywhere depended from bookcases and wall. The library is an elegant new fireproof apartment, and its walls are filled with cases of choice volumes. Its hardwood floor added much to the pleasure of the dancing.

Those who received with Mrs. Tyler were Mrs. Decker of Scranton, and Mr and Mrs. Wright. The guests at the reception numbered over two hundred and fifty.

The banquet room was done in pink and green, festoons of laurel being draped over the pictures, clustered in convenient corners to form a background for gorgeous bouquets of roses, or tastily twined around the beautiful candelabras.

Presiding at the samovars at either end of the banquet board stood Mrs. Daniel F. Ginna and Miss Catherine Yates, and assisting them were the Misses Maud and Elizabeth Van Boskerck, Miss Kittie Stewart, Miss Annie Murphy, and Miss Marion Dumont. Max Wiertz catered in his usual superior manner.

Both at the afternoon function and the dance which followed in the evening, Lander's orchestra of New York discoursed sweet music, and Lander himself did the honor to lead. Over two hundred honored the host and hostess with their presence at the evening dance, and the time passed merrily as the happy assembly of beautifully gowned women and gay gallants tripped to the melody of the waltz, gathered at intervals around their fair hostess to congratulate her upon the success attending the occasion, or sought quiet nooks to rest and chat a moment ere the dance continued. So swiftly sped the hours that the New Year's had made his debut long before the happy party dispursed.

Among the guests were:

Mrs Lincoln of New York, Miss Lincoln, Miss Lewis of Binghampton, Miss Margaret McIntyre of Philadelphia, Miss Cox of New York, Miss Dyckman of White Plains, Mr and Mrs Daniel Ginna, Mr and Mrs Marion S Ackerman, Mr and Mrs L G Timpson, Mr and Mrs Fred W Yates, Mr and Mrs James Hallock, Mr and Mrs Joseph Sandford, the Misses VanBoskerck, Holly, Stewart, Waring, Talmadge, Hunter, Pierson, Harte, Huntington, Lowe, Yates, Randolph, Cooley, Murphy, Woltmann, Vail, Whiton, Tracy, Reinhart and Depew, and Messrs. Cox, Huntington, Van Boskerck, Waring, Cooley, Murray, Walz, Place, Shepard, VanBuren, Moore, Erickson, Patton, Talmadge, Woltmann, Lowe, Dwight, Goddard, Wadsworth, Patterson and McGee.

Borough Horse Runs Wild.

A lively frolic was indulged in by a borough equine Monday afternoon. It was a gray horse driven by two lads, and owned by the estate of D. I. Smalley, to whose delivery sleigh it was attached. The start from the market at Somerset and Race streets was made with due decorum, but at the corner of Grove and Emily streets the sleight was overturned on a snowbank. The horse ran down Emily street, dragging the overturned sleigh, crossed Somerset street, and took to the sidewalk, falling at the door of J. K Arnold's grocery store. Regaining its feet, the horse started down the sidewalk, and fetched up against the iron railing at the Gesang and Turn Verein Hall, where it fell again and was caught. There was not any serious damage.

The Boys Club Christmas.

A great success was the Christmas entertainment at the Boys Club Saturday night. The boys greatly enjoyed the singing and playing of Miss Demaree, Mr. Hallock, and Mr. Bunyon. The funny songs of Mr. Bunyon were particularly relished. Miss Erskine, who is always popular with the boys, furnished charming piano music. At the end of the programme the members of the club all received packages which pleased them greatly, and which were prepared on the plan that the way to reach a boy's heart is through his stomach.

For rheumatism I have found nothing equal to Chamberlain's Pain Balm. It relieves the pain as soon as applied. J. W. Young, West Liberty, W. V. The prompt relief it affords is alone worth many times the cost, 50 cents. Its continued use will effect a permanent cure. For sale at Reynolds a Pharmacy. T. S. Armstrong, Manager.

Has the Best Wishes of the Board.

One of the leading insurance papers of New York speaks as follows concerning the resignation of a prominent Plainfielder:

"The board of directors of the German-American Insurance Company met last Thursday and accepted the resignation of John W. Murray. Mr. Murray has been vice-president of the company since 1873. He has always been regarded as one of the ablest underwriters in the United States. A director of the company, speaking of Mr. Murray's resignation, attributed it to a desire on his part to secure relief from the cares of business. Mr. Murray leaves the company with the best wishes of every member of the board of directors."

A Holiday Souvenir.

The new year brought to the editor's desk a handsome and valuable souvenir from the Prudential Insurance Company, with the compliments of the local superintendent, R. M. Dawson. It is a massive silver paper cutter, envelope opener, and folder. The Press will find it a useful office assistant through 1895, and its user cannot avoid the reflection that it is symbolic of the Prudential in its sterling worth, nor avoid the impressive message graven on the handle, of "claims paid over $17,000,000."

Hemorrhage from a Tooth.

An attempt was made to extract an old root from the jaw of Miss Nellie Arnold, daughter of Borough Clerk Arnold, Monday, and a terrible hemorrhage set in. Over a teacupful of blood gushed out, and much concern was felt. Dr. Fritts was summoned, and after two visits he succeeded in stopping the dangerous flow.

Marvelous Results.

From a letter written by Rev. J. Gunderman, of Dismondale, Mich., we are permitted to make this extract: "I have no hesitation in recommending Dr. King's New Discovery, as the results were almost marvelous in the case of my wife. While I was pastor of the Baptist Church at Elves Junction she was brought down by pneumonia succeeding la grippe. Terrible paroxysms of coughing would last hours with little interruption and it seemed as if she could not survive them. A friend recommended Dr. King's New Discovery; it was quick in its work and highly satisfactory in results. Sold by L. W. Randolph druggist. Regular size 50c and $1; our price 45c and 90c.

In the Methodist Church.

There was a good attendance at the services on Monday evening. Excepting that the exercises closed at 9:45 instead of midnight, they partook of the character of watch-night meeting. The Drew Quartette were present, and greatly aided in the services. Rev. M. L. Andariese delivered an appropriate address, and the quartette singing amid hushed silence, "Where shall I be", and "Remember me, O Mighty One".

Many took part in prayer and testimony, and several requests were made in behalf of friends. No note was taken of the passing time, and many would have been pleased to remain until the coming of the New Year.

MORTON IN THE CHAIR

First Republican Governor of New York for Years.

Inaugural Address of the New Executive and the Speech of Gov. Flower—Mrs. Morton and Her Daughters Present—Reception at the Executive Mansion.

Albany, Jan. 2.—For the first time in sixteen years New York finds a republican in the governor's chair. Levi P. Morton was inaugurated yesterday in the assembly chamber in the capitol.

A favored number, armed with cards of invitation from the secretary of state, were admitted to the floor. The rest looked on from the galleries.

The chamber was a rainbow of color. Over the top of the speaker's desk, extending out into the well nearly to the stenographer's desk, a platform had been built, and this and the entire wall of the chamber were completely covered with red, white and blue.

Extending along the balustrade of the ladies' gallery was a drapery of American flags, festooned over each other so as to carry out the idea of a painting. The two heavy pillars, one on each side of the speaker's desk, had been covered with flags, stretched from the ceiling to the base.

All around the carvings in the granite and at the sides of the platform were garlands of flags. Above the space on the platform, where the secretary of state administered the oath of office to Mr. Morton, was suspended a large red, white and blue star.

The platform, aside from the beautiful decorations made by flags and bunting, was adorned with a wealth of tropical plants, and behind the central seat, assigned to the governor-elect, was a large floral horseshoe, formed of rare blossoms.

Under military escort, Gov. Flower went from the Hotel Kenmore to the executive mansion, where he was met by Mr. Morton and his staff. The entire party then moved to the capitol in carriages, with the Albany republican league swelling the parade.

The party entered upon the platform in the assembly chamber through the speaker's room. Mrs. Morton, her five daughters and the flower of Albany society invaded the gentlemen's gallery by mistake and hastily retreated.

The inaugural ceremonies were presided over by the secretary of state, Hon. John Palmer. Doring's band was stationed in one of the gentlemen's galleries. It was but a few minutes after 11 o'clock when the Right Rev. Bishop William Crosswell Doane opened the exercises with prayer.

When Gov. Flower rose to speak he received an ovation from the throng. He said in part:

"Mr. Morton, in accordance with a time-honored custom, we are assembled here to witness the formal ceremonies which marks your installation into the high office of governor. As the retiring executive it is my duty, and as your personal friend it is my privilege, to welcome you to this capitol of the state and greet you as my official successor. The duties which you are about to assume are imposed upon you by a flattering and emphatic expression of the people's will.

"For, myself, I am pleased to announce that in rendering my account to the people I can point them to a state entirely out of debt and to a lower average state tax rate during the last three years than has been levied during the administration of any governor since 1854."

Then the new governor, who is not suspected of having kissed the Blarney stone of eloquence, made this short inaugural address, after being sworn in:

"Gov. Flower—Your cordial welcome and kindly words are but the continuation of the repeated courtesies which you have extended to me since the election and which I can but inadequately acknowledge; but they merit my gratitude and will be cherished in grateful remembrance.

"You will carry with you into your private life the good wishes of the people. During the 117 years that have passed since the adoption of the constitution of our state the office of governor has been occupied by many who were not alone distinguished in the state, but were foremost among the statesmen of the nation.

"Fellow-citizens, we are justly proud of the great state in which we live, and I should be restraining my feelings if I were to withhold this public acknowledgement of my appreciation of the honor which has been conferred upon me by my election as its chief executive."

The exercises closed with a benediction. Gov. Morton went to the executive mansion to hold a reception. Ex-Gov. Flower and Mrs. Flower left for Watertown.

Rich Oil Fields.

Findlay, O., Jan. 2.—Messrs. J. W. and T. E. Kirkbride who have drilled in the past few weeks two of the largest flowing oil wells in this country if not in the world, has added another big gusher to their list by drilling in No. 5, near their other big wells, in the Rollersville field. The estimated production of the new well is 10,000 barrels per day at the present price of 55 cents per barrel, will bring them an income from this well alone of $5,500 per day.

Fatal Dynamite Explosion.

Nashville, Jan. 2.—James Gray, James Alexander and James Fletcher, colored laborers employed in excavating for the foundation of the new state penitentiary, were engaged in thawing out a box of dynamite when the combustible became overheated and exploded. All three were instantly killed.

WHITE HOUSE CALLERS

Washington Turns Out To Greet the President.

Mrs. Cleveland Gained Fresh Popularity by Her Gracious Address, While Mr. Cleveland Shakes Every Extended Hand—A Precocious Youngster's Greeting.

Washington, Jan. 2.—The reception at the white house passed off quietly, there being no incidents of an unusual character to mar the pleasant scene and the usual crank failed to put in an appearance. One old man was present, however, who appeared to have a missive of some sort. He carried a voluminous document written in black and red ink, but if it was an "address" he intended to present, he was prevented from so doing by the celerity with which he was moved through the room. One patriotic youngster in his father's arms, removed his cap and shouted "Hurrah for Grover" while his father was shaking hands with Mrs. Cleveland. A man on crutches with both legs crippled was asked by Mrs. Cleveland to sit down and rest, which he did to the great delight of himself and wife until the ceremony was over.

"Grandmother" Chapman, aged 85, was invited behind the lines to rest. An amusing incident occurred when a doorkeeper attempted to prevent the passage of Secretary Lamont, and, earlier in the day, when the entrance to the blue room of Col. Wilson, superintendent of public buildings and grounds, in all the glory of his full dress uniform, was barred by one of his inferior officers who did not recognize him.

It was exactly six minutes before two o'clock when the end of the line reached Mrs. Cleveland. She shook the last hand as heartily as she did the first, and then began an animated conversation with those behind the line. It was about 12:30 when the general public, following the G. A. R., veterans, began to pass through the blue room, with the end of this column resting on Pennsylvania avenue between Seventeenth and Eighteenth streets. By hurrying people along, all who had so patiently waited for their turn were able to greet the president and his wife before the gates were closed. By the time the populace began to pass through all those assisting had dropped out and Mrs. Cleveland bravely stood up alone, shaking hands at the rate of sixty a minute. Old and young, black and white were treated alike and some, afflicted with "stage fright" after passing Mr. Cleveland, became aware of the presence of the first lady of the land only by her reaching out and grasping the hand that had just been dropped by the president.

Secretary of State Gresham entertained the diplomatic corps at breakfast immediately after their departure from the white house, the brilliant scene of which they had formed the most interesting figures being reproduced in part at the Arlington at noon. The ceremony followed the time-honored custom in its details for rigid formalities. Mrs. Gresham assisted by her daughters, Mrs. Andrews of Chicago and her niece, Mrs. Fuller, wife of Captain Fuller of the army, Mrs. Miller, Mrs. Rockhill, wife of the assistant secretary of the state, Mrs. Parker and Miss Reed of Illinois, received the guests, and at the end of of half an hour Secretary Gresham offering his own arm to Lady Pauncefote led the way to the dining room.

Sir Julian Pauncefote, the British ambassador, followed with Mrs. Gresham, the French ambassador with Baroness Fava and the Italian ambassador escorting Madame Patenotre.

WOMEN STRIKERS PARADE.

Stitchers Quit Work on Account of the Con ract System.

Haverhill, Mass., Jan. 2.—The striking women stitchers, to the number of 250, held a street parade yesterday. They formed at headquarters on Merrimac street and marched to Gray's shoe stitching rooms and called out his women employes, about 40 in number. The work done in the room was for W. W. Spaulding, and for this reason the strike was ordered.

Much is said as to the cause of the present labor troubles which have assumed gigantic proportions. One cause, and a prominent one, was the introduction of the so-called contract system, by which employes were compelled to leave a portion of their earnings in the hands of their employes, which they were obliged to forfeit if they quit work without giving two weeks' notice. This was introduced into Chick Brothers' factory and one or two others, three years or more ago, and has always been a bone of contention and produced much dissatisfaction among the help. But a still more important reason came from the fact that the employes want wages restored to where they were before the panic of 1893.

The panic broke these prices up and the wage earners worked for what they could get. But with the revival of business the old wages were not restored, and cut downs became frequent. To check this and to bring prices up again to the former standard, the strike was inaugurated, though the ostensible cause was the small earnings made by the operators on the consolidated method machine.

JOHN M'BRIDE IS HERE.

The New President of the Federation of Labor Takes Office.

New York, Jan. 2.—At the first meeting of the new executive council of the American Federation of Labor the following officers were present:

John McBride, the newly-elected president; James Duncan, of Baltimore, second vice president; T. J. Elderkin, third vice president; Augustin McCraith, general secretary, and John E. Lennon, New York city, treasurer.

Ex-President Samuel Gompers and ex-Secretary Chris Evans handed over to the new committee the books and papers of the federation.

President McBride said that he could not yet speak on any anticipated changes. He trusted and expected to see a grand union of labor men before another year, and believes a presidential candidate will be put in the field.

The business of the session was principally of a routine character.

Adolph Strasser and Andrew Furuseth were appointed as a legislative committee to watch the proceedings of congress at Washington.

PENNSYLVANIA POPULISTS.

An Active Educational Campaign Agreed Upon in Convention.

Greensburg, Pa., Jan. 2.—The populist leaders of the state, about fifty in number, met in conference here, Dr. C. V. Bush of Huntingdon county, presided. An active educational campaign for this year was agreed upon and the industrial legion was indorsed as a means of raising funds for this work. The Omaha platform was indorsed and Senator Flynn's "Greater Pittsburg" and good roads bills and the financial schemes of congress were disapproved.

A resolution was adopted suggesting to congress the establishment of a board of charities, with a cabinet official at its head, with national powers adequate for the prompt relief that calamities such as the country has lately been subjected to require. Coxey's idea of good roads and bonds was indorsed, as was Governor Tillman's plan of dealing with the liquor traffic.

This makes the death list foot up to sixteen.

No attempt has as yet been made to search the ruins, the police disclaiming it to be their duty. The proprietors of the burned hotel have lost all and are taking no steps to look for the bodies.

Seven Hundred Laborers Strike.

Pittsburg, Jan. 2.—Seven hundred Slav laborers have struck at the Edgar Thomson steel works of the Carnegie Steel company at Braddock on account of a reduction in wages. Supt. Gayley of that company, says he will be able to fill their places to-day. The nine furnaces were banked and if the places of the strikers cannot be filled immediately 3,000 men will be thrown out of employment. The strikers were reduced from $1.40 to $1.20 per day and this caused the trouble.

[Copyright, 1894, by Bacheller, Johnson & Bacheller.]

"Well, parson," McMonigle began at last, "ef I had o' seen you standin' in the front o' the sto'e clean to the minute you come back here, I'd think you'd heerd more'n names.

"Of co'se we couldn't put it quite ez eloquent az you did, but we had jest everyone of us 'lowed that sense the day May Meredith dropped out o' Simpkinsville the sky ain't never shone the same.

"But for a story? Well, I don't see thet ther's much story to it, and to them thet didn't know her I reckon it's a common enough story.

"But ez to the old nigger, Proph', being mixed up in it, I can't eggsac'ly say that's so, though I don't never think about the old nigger without seemin' to see little May Day's long yaller curls, an' ef I think about her, I seem to see the old man, somehow.

"Don't they 'come to you all that-a-way?"

He paused, took a few puffs from his pipe and looked from one to another for confirmation of his story.

"Yas," said the doctor, "jest exactly that-a-way, Dan'l. Go on, ol' man. You're a-tellin' it straight."

"Well, that's what I'm aimin' to do." He laid his pipe down on the stove's fender as he resumed his recital.

"Old Proph'—which his name wasn't Prophet, of co'se, which ain't to say a name nohow, but his name was Jeremy, an' he used to go by name o' Jerry; then somebody called him 'Jeremy, the prophet,' an' from that it got down to 'Prophet' and then 'Proph'—and so it stayed.

"Well, as I started to say, Proph' he was jest one o' Meredith's ol' slave niggers—a sort o' quare, half luney, no-'count darky—never done nothin' sense freedom but what he had a mind to, jest livin' on Meredith right along.

"He wasn't to say crazy but—well, he'd stand and talk to anything, a dog, a cat, a tree, a toad-frog—anything. Heap o' times I've seen him limpin' up the road an' he'd turn round sudden an' seemed to be talkin' to somethin' thet was follerin' him, an' when he'd git tired he'd start on an' maybe every minute look back over his shoulder and laugh. They was only one thing Proph was, to say, good for. Proph was a capital A 1 hunter—shorest shot in the state, in my opinion, and when he'd take a notion he could go out where nobody wouldn't sight a bird or a squir'l all day long, an' he'd fill his game bag.

"Well, sir, the children round town, they was all afreed of 'im, and the niggers—th'aint a nigger in the county thet don't b'lieve to this day that Proph would cunjer 'em ef he'd git mad.

"An' time he takin' to fortune-tellin', the school child'en thet'd be feerd to go up to him by theirselves, they'd go in a crowd, an' he'd call out fortunes to 'em, an' they'd give him biscuits out o' their lunch cans.

"From that he come to tellin' anybody's fortune, an' so the young men, they got him to come to the old year party one year, jest for the fun of it, an' time the clock was most on the twelve strike, Proph he stood up an' called out e-vents of the comin' year. An', sir, for a crack-brained fool nigger, he'd call out the smartest things you ever hear. Every year for five year Proph called out comin' e-vents at the old year party; an' matches that nobody suspicioned, why he'd call 'em out, an' shore enough, 'fore the year was out, the weddin's would come off. An' babies! He'd predic' babies a year ahead—not always callin' out full names, but jest insinuatin' so that anybody that wasn't deef in both ears would understand.

"But to come back to the story of May Meredith—he ain't in it, no ways in particilar. It's only thet sense she could walk an' hold the ol' man's hand he doted on her, an' she was jest ez wropped up in him. Many a time when she was a toddler he's rode into town, mule-back, with her settin' up in front of him. An' then when she got bigger it was jest as ef she was the queen to him—that's all. He saved her from drowndin' once't, jumped in the creek after her an' couldn't swim a stroke, an' mos' drownded hisself—an' time she had the diptheria, he never shet his eyes ez long ez she was sick enough to be set up with—set on the flo' by her bed all night.

"That's all the way Proph is mixed up in her story. An' now, sense they're both gone, ef you 'magine you see one, you seem to see the other.

"An' May Day's story? Well, I hardly like to disturb it. Don't rightly know how to tell it, nohow.

"I don't doubt folks has told you she went wrong, but that's a mighty hard way to tell the story of May Meredith.

"We can't none of us deny, I reckon, thet she went wrong. A red-cheeked peach thet don't know nothin' but the dew and the sun, and to grow sweet and purty—it goes wrong when it's wrenched off the stem and et by a hog. That's one way o' goin' wrong.

"Little Daisy Meredith didn't have no mo' idee o' harm than that mockin' bird o' Rowton's in its cage there, thet sing, weekday songs all Sunday nights.

"She wash't but jest barely turned seventeen years—ez sweet a little girl ez ever taught a Baptist Sunday-school class—when he come down from St. Louis—though some says he come from Chicago, an' some says Canada—lookin' after some St. Louis land mortgages. An', givin' the devil his due, he was the handsomest man thet ever trod Simpkinsville streets—that is, of cos'e, for a outsider. Seen May Day first time on her way to church, an' looked after her—then squared back di-rect, an' follered her. Walked into church de-lib'rate, an' behaved like a gentleman, religiously inclined, ef ever a well-dressed city person behaved that way.

"Well, sir, from that day on, he froze to her and, strange to say, every mother of a marriageable daughter in town was jealous exceptin' one, an' that one was May's own mother. An' she not only wasn't jealous—which she couldn't 'a' been, of co'se—but she wasn't pleased.

"She seemed to feel a dread of him from the start, and she treated him mighty shabby, but of co'se the little girl, she made it up to him in politeness, good as she could, an' he didn't take no notice of it. Kep' on showin' the old lady every 'tention, an' when he'd be in town, most any evenin' you'd go past the Meredith gate you could see his horse tied there—everything open and above-board, so it seemed.

"Well, sir, he happened to be here the time of the old year party, three year ago. You've been here a year and over, ain't you, parson?"

"Yes, I was stationed here at fall conference a year ago this November, you recollect."

"Yas, so you was. Well, all this is about two year befo' you come.

"Well, sir, when it was known that May Day's city beau was goin' to be here for the party, everybody looked to see some fun, 'cause they know'd how free ol' Proph' made with names, an' they wondered ef he'd have gall enough to call out May Day's name with the city feller's. Well, ez luck would have it, the party was at my house that year, an' I tell you, sir, folks thet hadn't set up to see the old year out for ten years, come that night jest for fear they'd miss somethin'. But of co'se we saw through it. We knowed what fetched 'em.

"Well, sir, that was the purtiest party I ever see in my life. Our Simpkinsville pattern for young girls is a toler'ble neat one, ef I do say it, ez shouldn't, bein' kin to forty-leven of 'em. We ain't got no, to say, ugly girls in town—never had many, though some has plained down consider'ble when they got settled in years, but the girls there that night was ez perfec' a bunch of girls ez you ever see—jest ez purty a show o' beauty ez any rose arbor could turn out on a spring day.

"Have you ever went to gether roses, parson, each one seemin' to be the purtiest tell you'd got a handful, an' you'd be startin' to come away, when away up on top o' the vine you'd see one that was enough pinker an' sweeter'n the rest to make you climb for it, an' when you'd git it, you'd stick it in the top of yore bouquet a little higher'n the others?

"I see you know what I mean. Well, that was the way May Day looked that night. She was that top bud.

"I had three nieces and wife and she had sev'al cousins, there—all purty enough to draw hummin' birds—but I say little Daisy Meredith, she jest topped 'em all for beauty and sweetness an' modesty that night.

"An' the stranger—well, I donno jest what to liken him to less'n it is to one of them princes thet stalk around the stage an' give orders when they have play actin' in a show tent.

"They wasn't no flies on his shape, nor his rig, nor his manners, neither. Talked to the old ladies—ricollect my wife she had a finger wropped up, an' he ast her about it and advised her to look after it an' give her a recipe for bone-felon. She thought they wasn't nobody like him. An' he jest simply danced the wall flowers dizzy, give the fiddlers money, an'—well, he done everything thet a person o' the royal family of city gentry might be expected to do. An' everybody wondered what mo' Mrs. Meredith wanted for her daughter. Tell the truth, some mistrusted, an' 'lowed thet she jest took on that way to hide how tickled she was.

"Well, ez I say, the party passed off lovely, an' after awhile it came near twelve o'clock, an' the folks commenced to look round for ol' Proph to come in an' call out e-vents same as he always done.

"So d'rectly the boys they went out an' fetched him in—drawin' him 'long by the sleeve, an' he holdin' back like ez ef he dreaded to come in.

"I tell you, parson, I'll never forgit the way that old nigger looked, longest day I live. Seemed like he couldn't sca'cely walk, an' he stumbled, an' when he took his station front o' the mantel shelf, seemed like he never would open his mouth to begin.

"An' when at last he started to talk, stid o' runnin' on an' laughin' an' plea-sin' everybody like he always done, he lifted up his face an' raised up his hands, same ez you'd do, ef you was startin' to read in public prayer. An' then he commenced:

"Sez he—an' when he started, he spoke so low down in his th'oat you couldn't sca'cely hear him—sez he:

"'Every year, my friends, I stand befo' you an' look throo de open gate into the new year. An',' sez he, 'seem like I see a long percession o' people pass befo' me—some two by two, some one by one, some horseback, some mule-back, some afoot—some cryin', some laughin', some stumblin' ez they'd walk, an' gittin' up agin', some fallin' to rise no mo', some faces I know, some strangers.'

"An' right here, parson, he left off for a minute, an' then when he commenced again, he dropped his voice plain down into his th'oat, an' he squinted his eyes an' seemed to be tryin' to see somethin' way off like, an' he sez, sez he:

"'But, to-night,' sez he, 'I don't know whar the trouble is,' sez he, 'but, look hard ez I can, I don't seem to see plain, 'cause the sky is darkened,' sez he, 'an while I see people comin' an' goin' an' I see de doctor's buggy on the road, an' hear the church bell, an' the organ, I can't make out nuthin' plain, 'cause the sky is overshaddered by a big dark cloud. An' now,' sez he, 'seem like the cloud is takin' the shape of a great big bird. Now I see him spread his wings an' fly into Simpkinsville, an' while he hangs over it in the sky seem to me I can see everybody stop an' gaze up an' hold their breath to see where he'll light—everybody hopin' to see him light in their tree. An' now—oh! now I see him comin' down, down, down—an' now he's done lit,' says he. I recollect that expression o' his, 'he's done lit,' sez he, 'in the limb of a tall maginolia tree a little piece out o' town.'

"Well, sir, when he come to the bird lightin' in a maginolia tree, a little piece out o' town, I tell you, parson, you could a' heerd a pin drop. You see, maginolias is purty sca'ce in Simpkinsville. Plenty o' them growin' round the edge o' the woods, but 'ceptin' them thet Sonny Simpkins set out in his yard years ago, I don't know of any nearer than Meredith's place. An' right at his gate, ef you ever takin notice, there's a maginolia tree purty nigh ez tall ez a post oak.

"An' so when the ol' nigger got to where the fine bird lit in the maginolia tree, all them thet had the best manners, they set still, but seeh ez didn't keer—an' I was one of thet las' sort—why we jest glanced at the city feller di-rec' to see how he was takin' it.

"But, sir, it didn't ruffle one of his feathers, not a one.

"An' then the nigger he went on: Sez he, squintin' his eyes agin, an' seemin' to strain his sight, sez he:

"'Now, he's lit,' sez he—I wish I could give it to you in his language, but I never could talk nigger talk—'now he's lit,' sez he, 'an' I got a good chance to study him,' sez he. 'I see he ain't the same bird he looked to be, 'fo' he lit.

"'His wing feathers is mighty fine, an' they rise in gorgeous plumes, but they can't hide his claws,' sez he, 'an' when I look eicser,' sez he, 'I see he got owl eyes an' a sharp beak, but seem like nobody can't see 'em. They all so dazzled with his wing feathers they can't see his claws.

"'An' now whiles I'm lookin' I see him rise up,' sez he, 'an' fly three times round the tree an' now I see him swoop down right befo' the people's eyes, an' befo' they know it, he's riz up in the air ag'in, an' spread his wings, an' the sky seems so darkened that I can't see nothin' clair—only a long stream o' yaller hair floatin' behind him.

"'Now I see everybody's heads drop, an' I hear 'em cryin'—but,' sez he, 'they ain't cryin' about the thief bird, but they cryin' about the yaller hair—the yaller hair—the yaller hair.'

FOR PLAINFIELD'S PROGRESS.

A Forlorn Hope at Murfreesboro.

Jan. 2, 1863, saw the final and decisive repulse of Bragg's Confederates by Rosecrans' army at Murfreesboro. The last charge was made by General John C. Breckinridge's division, and the place of honor fell to Hanson's brigade of Kentuckians, known as "The Orphans." The task was in the nature of a forlorn hope. The Confederate army on the north side of Stone river lay in range of several Union batteries crowning a height on the south side. Those batteries must be silenced, or Bragg's army would be compelled to retreat. Breckinridge's division lay south of the river, Hanson's brigade being nearest the stream, and when the column was formed it marched along the bank under orders to fire a single volley when closing on the Union guns, then carry them with the bayonet.

The Union artillerists and their supports, finding their line virtually outflanked, rushed down the slope to the river for safety, closely pursued by the exulting Kentuckians. The north bank opposite this scene was occupied by General Thomas L. Crittenden's corps, Rosecrans' left wing, with an artillery brigade of 58 guns commanding the river fords. The moment the retreating Union soldiers across the valley got inside the range of those cannon, Crittenden ordered his chief of artillery to let loose the entire battery upon Hanson's men. The guns fired at the rate of 100 shots a minute. Forests which stood in the pathway went down as before a hurricane, and "The Orphans" were nearly annihilated. Hanson was killed, and the regiments in the van lost half their officers and men.

GEORGE L. KILMER.

GENERAL HANSON.

For the first time in twenty-five years the Sheriff of Union County has left Amos Moffett, the veteran constable, from the court list. The faithful services of this officer deserved better treatment.

Frank R. Stockton has written another of the stories such as only Frank R. Stockton can write; and as The Daily Press gets everything good that's going, in The Daily Press it will appear. The opening instalment will be printed Friday, Jan. 4, and everyone who loves Stockton stories (and who does not?) must now be on the lookout for "Moses and Aaron; or, A One-Man Sin". It will be published in this paper, and you'll read it there or nowhere.

"An Arkansas Prophet", the New Year's story now running in these columns from the pen of Ruth McEnery Stuart, will be completed tomorrow. Like all the Daily Press serials it is of reasonable length and of the highest merit that money can buy and genius produce. The most popular authors of the day are writing new serials for this paper for the new year, and no other Plainfield paper can get the stories to print because they are copyrighted to Daily Press use. Besides being the best Plainfield newspaper, The Press continues to maintain as high a literary grade as the leading magazines. To keep posted on the news and the best literature of the day, one needs only The Daily Press, and nothing else. The world's progress is its field, with Plainfield in the lead

Always endeavoring to improve the quality of its contents, The Daily Press begins the new year with additions to its already large list of novel and original features. Notable among these is the series of Short Stories of Heroism. 300 of these will be given during the year. Everybody likes to read an inspiring story of adventure, and these are brief, pointed, and true. They are arranged chronologically for publication on or about the date of the anniversary of each event recorded. Moreover, these Stories of Heroism are of great educational value, and it is proper to suggest to the attention of teachers the advisability of using these stories as a daily reading lesson. Marking, as they often do, the solving of gigantic issues of history or revealing instances of exemplary personal conduct or bravery, nothing can be more instructive, inspiring or interesting to the young. The typographical arrangement is striking, and gives an individuality to the feature, which, being copyrighted, will be found in The Daily Press, and in no other paper in Plainfield.

The Daily Press hopes much for Plainfield in 1895. The year just ended has been full of judicious planning, and within this year and the year succeeding Plainfield will acquire a phenomenal growth. She has been steadily progressing during the past twelve months, and under the new order of things she will boom with prodigious strides. The growth will be as permanent as rapid. Within the town, sewers have been begun, and the early Spring will witness the rapid-transit extensions which The Press has been praying for, and which mean so much for the place. The trolley roads to the outskirts will open up homes for the waiting throng, and the many advantages already possessed by Plainfield will be augmented to such extent that this will be New York's greatest suburban paradise. Already Plainfield is better and more favorably known than most towns within earshot of the metropolis, and with its new and completed attractions Plainfield will be the Mecca of the commuter who wants the best home at the least cost. Another factor in the growth of Plainfield will be the new electric railway from New York to Philadelphia. The competition thus created will eventually result in the reduction of railway fares, and transportation for the commuter will be lowered to a nominal figure. New York taxes have gone up and are going higher. The death rate has kept pace with the tax rate, and the people are longing for a cheaper community and a purer air. There is bound to be an exodus from the big city, and every indication is that Plainfield will reap the largest benefit. Here's to the greater Plainfield!

Death of Frank Talliant.

The many friends of Frank Talliant will be pained to learn of his sudden death, which occurred at the home of his sister, Mrs. John B. Sharp, Newark, Monday night at 8. He was as well as usual till Saturday night about 12, when he was taken very ill, and from that time till he died he did not regain consciousness. The cause of death was Bright's disease.

He was the only son of the late Cyprian L. Talliant, and was 27 years old.

A grief stricken mother and two sisters survive him, Mrs. John B. Sharp of Newark, and Mrs. Charles S. Greer of North Plainfield. His mother also resides in Newark.

The body was brought here for burial.

Funeral services were held this afternoon at the home of his sister, Mrs. Charles Greer, Rev. Dr. C. R. Barnes officiating. The pall-bearers were: William Blimm, George Babcock, R. W. Schlereth, Peter Blimm, B. F. Crane, and George Mehl. Interment was made in the family plot in North Plainfield Cemetery.

The Bond Record.

In the new issue of The Cosmopolitan, it is noted that Harvey Fisk & Sons are offering to readers of the magazine free copies of The Bond Record. This is recognized as the authority on bonds throughout the country. For two years the property of the Fisks, it has become so great a publication that they have organized it into a stock corporation, and under their direction it is assuming even greater importance than ever. As the controllers are chiefly Plainfielders, they will doubtless take pleasure in supplying free copies to the readers of The Daily Press as well as to the readers of The Cosmopolitan. Write to the Fisks at 24 Nassau street, New York.

A Poodle Caused His Fall.

Al. D. Taylor of 21 Harmony street still has his hand bound up because of a peculiar accident which occurred a short time ago. He was going upstairs to bed, carrying a lighted lamp. At the top of the stairs lay a poodle. Not seeing the animal, Mr. Taylor tripped over it. Feeling that he was falling, as a result of the sudden loss of balance, and realizing that unless the lamp were extinguished the house would be set afire, Mr. Taylor had the presence of mind to throw behind him the hand holding the lamp, and in his fall he crushed the lamp under him and smothered the blaze. The broken glass cut his hand and thigh, and he fell to the foot of the stairs and was badly bruised

The reader of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly on the blood and mucous surface of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer $100 for any case that it fails to cure.

A NEWSPAPER STORY.

Last March was a very eventful period in the history of the Echo. So many things happened then to turn our own immediate world upside down that we have not recovered from the effect yet—indeed, they are only just beginning to be felt.

In the beginning the editor accepted a position on a New York paper and his place was filled by Austin Marlow, a friend of our former chief and a man who surpassed him, if such a thing were possible, in severity and industry.

About that time, too, the Avalanche, a contemporary that had appeared before the public in a blaze of glory about six months before, was declared insolvent and died out in a flicker of despair, and its corps of reporters and editors were compelled to accept the disagreeable occupation of seeking positions elsewhere. By some device, one of them, a man who had something of a power in the management of the defunct paper, contrived to be appointed managing editor of the Call, and another one drifted around our way and found refuge under the wing of the Echo.

She was the second girl we had ever had on the force, for in spite of the brilliant record Belle Scott had made for herself before she ended her career as a professional reporter by marrying the then city editor, the Echo had persistently refused to allow another woman within its portals, and we had gradually resumed our cast-off habits and had become almost as badly demoralized as we were when our first girl appeared among us. But, when Eva Jamison came over from the Avalanche the new management considered the matter of accepting her for awhile and then, to our mingled joy and regret, she became one of us.

The man from the Avalanche, who had become manager of the Call, evidently had ideas of his own about running a newspaper, and he was rapidly transforming the staid columns of that conservative old journal into a series of sensational headlines and thrilling paragraphs that made timid readers tremble and wonder what the world in general and journalism in particular was coming to.

One evening in the beginning of August the Call contained a rather startling statement about the departed Avalanche. It affirmed that the premature demise of that paper was caused by many crooked deals among some of the business managers, transactions by which a few interested profited at the expense of the others, and which, if exposed, would result in severe punishment being inflicted upon the guilty persons; and, it added, it was known beyond a doubt that there were, at the time of the writing, people in the employ of the Echo who were seriously implicated in the disgraceful affair.

Our city editor smiled when he read it, and decided that, although the article savored of war in the near future, it was undoubtedly the better part of valor to let the tomahawk rest a little while. But Eva Jamison was eager to accept the challenge at once and in some way she succeeded in getting a vigorous reply in the Wednesday morning Echo.

That day about ten o'clock she received a note from the editor of the Call. It was brief, but emphatic. "Please call at our office before twelve o'clock, or you will surely regret it." She asked the advice of no one, but went as requested.

"You are prompt," the editor said with a smile. "You must have understood the full meaning of my message."

"No," she answered, "I did not understand that in the least, but I understand you well enough to know that there is some villainy afoot, and I wish to know what it is."

"You are frank, as usual," he told her blandly. "No, there is no villainy afoot, now, Miss Jamison, only an attempt to expose past fraud. The reason I sent for you is this. You were in the confidence of all the leading lights of the Avalanche and I want you to give me all the information you can about the matter hinted at in the Call last night. I know there are many things connected with that enterprise that will not bear investigation. I am going to write the affair up fully in this paper, and if you don't tell what you know, I shall take it for granted that you are in with the head schemers hand and glove and I shall denounce you as an accomplice."

"You are right," she said, "in stating that I had the confidence of my employers. They trusted me far more than they ever did you, even though you tried so hard to ingratiate yourself enough to learn the ins and outs of the business. I do not know that there were ever any unfair dealings. But if I had positive knowledge that there were, I would let you denounce me a thousand times over before I would give one particle of information to such a disreputable sheet as you have made this paper. In its columns your own character is mirrored. I suppose you are doing this in remembrance of that little unpleasantness last winter."

"Well, not altogether," he said, coolly. "I don't mind admitting that I do entertain a little more animosity toward you than any one else, for a man never forgets such a decided rejection as you gave me. But I hold a grudge against the whole concern. They never treated me right, considering the power I could have had in managing the paper. But I've got 'em now where I can lambaste 'em to my heart's content, and I am going to do it. I've given you a chance to escape, for I never like to be harsh with a woman, but as you refuse to do as I request, you'll have to take it along with the rest them."

She came back to the office and took up her work that afternoon as usual. The Call's editor was true to his threats, and that night a long list of unprincipled actions, either real or fancied were made public, and Eva Jamison was charged with being one of the most unscrupulous of the schemers.

Justin Marlow called Eva to his desk after having read the article, and pointing to her name in the headlines, asked: "What are you going to do about it, Miss Jamison?"

"Nothing," she answered. "What can I do?"

"You can deny it. You can prove that the accusations are not true. I insist upon you doing so."

"I am very sorry that you view the matter in that way," she said, "for I am determined to pay no more attention whatever to his attacks."

"That would be an acknowledgement of your guilt."

"If people choose to construe it so, very well."

"If that is your decision, Miss Jamison," he said, slowly, "I must ask you to sever your connection with the Echo, for reasons which must be obvious to you I cannot afford to have the paper injured."

"Of course not," she answered, choking back the tears. "When shall I get At once!"

"It would be better so," he replied curtly.

And so she went. For more than two months we lost sight of her, and during that time life became so nearly unbearable for all who were under the city editor's sway that never a day passed but each worker vowed he would go away, but for various reasons all remained true to the Echo.

The first week in November the city editor left the sanctum, saying he could not tell exactly when he would return. His assistant asserted with an air of confidence that Justin Marlow was breaking his heart about Eva Jamison and that he had gone to hunt her. Subsequent events proved that for once the assistant was pretty nearly right.

In a little compartment of the Globe office he found her.

"I want you back, Eva," he told her. "Not to the Echo, but to me."

"I have never proved myself innocent of those charges which the Call made against me," she said quietly.

"I don't want you to," he retorted. "I know that you are an angel. Why should you care what the Call says?"

"I never did. It was you who cared."

"Yes, I know I was an idiot," he admitted, magnanimously. "Can you forgive me?"

Evidently she could, for yesterday the destiny of our second girl reporter was linked with that of our second city editor, an event which we considered but a proper complement to a trial that was held in Justice Kell's court room last week, when the former proprietors of the Avalanche proved themselves and Eva Jamison innocent, and the editor of the Call, the instigator of the charges, was sentenced to three years' imprisonment for theft and slander.—Chicago News.

FUDGER AT VASSAR.

A Delightful Home-made Confection That is Herein Explained.

"Nearly every night at college, said the Vassar girl, "some girl may be found somewhere who is making 'fudges' or giving a fudge party. Fudges are Vassar chocolates, and they are simply the most delicious edibles ever manufactured by a set of sweetmeat-loving girls. Their origin is wrapped in mystery. We only know that their recipe is handed down from year to year by old students to new, and that they belong peculiarly to Vassar."

"To make them take two cups of sugar, one cup of milk, a piece of butter one half the size of an egg, and a teaspoonful of vanilla extract. The mixture is cooked until it begins to get grimy. Then it is taken from the fire, stirred briskly and turned into buttered tins. Before it hardens it is cut in squares. You may eat the fudge either cold or hot; it is good either way. It never tastes so delicious, however, as when made at college over a spluttering gas lamp in the seclusion of your own apartment. The various difficulties that this method entails makes the fudge taste sweeter."

The Inspiration of Treasure Island.

R. L. Stephenson told of the way he came to write "Treasure Island." One day he was having fun with pen and ink and a box of water colors. It occurred to him to make a map of an island; so an island he drew. "It was elaborately and beautifully colored; the shape of it took my fancy beyond expression; it contained harbors that pleased me like sonnets, and with the unconsciousness of the predestined I ticketed my performance 'Treasure Island.'" And this was the beginning of that famous first book, "the map itself with its infinite eloquent suggestion" having most to do with the growth of the story in after life. The original title was "The Sea Cook." Mr. Stevenson concluded the reminiscences of this first performance thus: "It is my contention—my superstition, if you like—that who is faithful to his map and consults it and draws from it his inspiration, daily and hourly, gains positive support, and not mere negative immunity from accident. The tail has a root there; it grows in that soil; it has a spine of its own behind the words." As the writer studies it "relations will appear that he had not thought upon; he will discover obvious, though unsuspected, short cuts and footprints for his messengers; and even when a map is not all the plot, as in 'Treasure Island,' it will be found to be a mine of suggestion."

Hubby's New Cigars.

She got out of her carriage and walked into the cigar store, at the same unfastening her sealskin coat.

"I want a box of cigars for my husband please. Let me see all kinds."

"Now here are some Key West goods we can sell for eight dollars, and here are domestics from that down to $2.50," said the obliging clerk.

She looked at them carefully.

"You may wrap up that box at $2.50," said she with great dignity. "I like the shade better. It will about match his smoking jacket."—Indianapolis Sentinel.

Resources of a Populist Newspaper.

The Mississippi Populist, a paper recently started here to reform the politics of the State, is no more. Editor McDowell has also disappeared, leaving this note to the employees:

"I leave two lamps, bucket and dipper, coal scuttle, shovel, broom, washpan, coal-oil can, and about 700 pounds of coal. Divide same between you."

"The world," whispered the comforter, "will throw the broad mantle of charity over you."

The weary sinner raised her streaming eyes in hope.

"Can you," she faltered, "make it a close fitting sacque with puffed sleeves?"—Town Topics.

AN ALMOST MIRACULOUS CURE.

The Statement of Mr. Edward Teel, Jr., of Dunellen, N. J.

TO THE PUBLIC:

From a sense of duty I desire to call public attention to the almost miraculous cure which Dr. Lighthill effected in the case of my wife. For eleven years she had been afflicted with piles of an unusual severe and distressing character. She suffered every day of her life the most intense pain, attended with frequent and profuse hemorrhage. This state of things debilitated her entire system until she became a perfect wreck of her former self.

We made every effort to obtain a cure but they all resulted in bitter disappointment, although a number of physicians of excellent reputations for skill in that direction had treated her case. She grew worse and worse all the time, the pain became perfectly unbearable and I felt she could not bear the strain of her condition much longer. In this extremity, a friend of mine, Mr. W. E. Dilts, a resident of Roselle, N. J., a passenger conductor on the New Jersey Central told me that he had been similarly affected, and had been permanently cured by Dr. Lighthill, after other medical skill had failed. He assured me that the doctor would cure my wife, no matter how severe her case may be, and his prediction proved perfectly correct. In spite of her desperate condition, Dr. Lighthill, I am glad to say, has effected a complete and perfect cure in her case, and has given her new life.

Since the cure has been effected she has gained in health and strength and is so improved in appearance that her friends scarcely recognize her. They all consider her cure as almost miraculous, and Dr. Lighthill's praise is heard on every side. Our gratitude to Dr. Lighthill is unbounded and we only hope that other sufferers may be benefited by this publication.

EDWARD TEEL, JR.

A Flattering Testimonial from Colonel John Dietrich, One of Plainfield's Oldest and Best Known Residents.

16 ARLINGTON PLACE,
Plainfield, N. J., July 17, 1894.

I am profoundly grateful to Dr. Lighthill for his speedy and radical cure of a most painful malady of over ten years standing with which I was afflicted.

I deem it proper to say to all afflicted to place themselves under the care of this skilful physician and be permanently cured.

I will cheerfully impart any information I possess when called upon. JOHN DIETRICH.

Mr. Thomas Callahan of No. 214 Richmond street Cured of a Very Distressing Trouble by Dr. Lighthill.

PLAINFIELD, N. J., June 1, 1894.

TO THE PUBLIC:

For some time past I have been greatly distressed with noises in the head. They were all over my head and troubled me constantly; they were loudest at night when everything was quiet and at such times would often keep me from sleeping and disturb my rest. In fact they got to be so bad and distressing that they affected my whole nervous system as well as my health. I did not obtain the least relief until I placed myself under the care of Dr. Lighthill of No. 132 Crescent avenue, who effected a complete cure in my case in a short time and made me a very happy man.

THOMAS CALLAHAN,
214 Richmond street.

A Card From Mr. T. R VanZandt,

of Nos. 304 and 306 Park ave.,
Plainfield, N. J.

I certify with pleasure that Dr. Lighthill has effectually cured me of a most painful case of piles. For some time past I had been subject to its attacks, but the last attack was so exceedingly painful that it completely upset my whole system. The pain extended to my legs and in many other directions, and made me so nervous that I could neither sleep, sit down, lie down or move about without serious discomfort and distress. Such was my condition when I applied to Dr. Lighthill for relief, and I am glad to say that as soon as he took hold of my case, I began to improve, and in a short time found myself completely cured. Dr. Lighthill has also effected a radical and permanent cure in a most terrible case of piles on my cousin, Mr. J. V. Z. Griggs, of Rocky Hill, N. J., whose flattering testimonial is in Dr. Lighthill's possession.

Chapped Hands and Lemon Juice and Glycerine.

Rough, painful, perhaps bleeding hands are bad enough, but what annoys you most is the untidy looks which scrubbing seems only to make worse and which nothing but warm weather will quite remedy. Yet lots of people find relief in a simple mixture prepared by us from lemon juice and glycerine—names which suggest comfort and cure. Glycerine is everywhere used, but people forget the cleansing and whitening properties of lemon juice and its power of neutralizing the bad effect of strong soaps. REYNOLDS'S LEMON JUICE AND GLYCERINE once used is never forgotten. Sprinkler bottles 25c. REYNOLDS'S PHARMACY, Park and North avenues.

NO HURRIED ARMISTICE

Unofficial Report Received by Minister Kurino.

The Liberals Demand the Investment of Pekin by the Japanese Troops—What Their Representative Thinks the Effect Has Been on the Prosperity of the Country.

Washington, Jan. 2.—Information, though not through official sources has reached Japanese Minister Kurino to the effect that the liberal party leaders in Japan had presented to the Japanese parliament an aggressive manifesto concerning the prosecution of the war against China, the main feature of which is a thorough disinclination to consent to any policy which will lead to an armistice in advance of the investment of Pekin by the Japanese forces.

This action, if confirmed, Minister Kurino thinks, though it may have a very important bearing on the situation in Japan owing to the fact that the liberal party is one of high standing and great influence, he does not regard as possessing any great significance as affecting the attitude of the government which following the fixed line upon which the war has been thus far prosecuted will be followed from the standpoint already adjudged best for the public welfare, regardless of partisan decree or manifestos.

So far as an armistice is concerned, that is a matter yet somewhat more in future than the proceedings already taken with that view indicate. It cannot be an immediate matter and certainly there can be no abatement of actual hostilities until the assembling of the ambassadors empowered to formulate the plans for peace. The signing by these plenipotentiaries of a request for an armistice and consequent cessation of hostilities thus forming the basis of a definite peace arrangement, it is thought by Japanese officials, here, will be the only method of leading to a truce. This will require time.

There may be long discussions in quieting dissenting views likely to be manifested by some of the officials participating in the peace convention and altogether it is too early to predict anything looking to an immediate armistice. The strong views of the liberal party in Japan may give impetus to the demands upon them, which the representatives of that government, including the American diplomat, Mr. Foster, acting in his personal capacity may regard beyond the pale of reasonable request. The diversity of views thus arising would naturally prolong a consummation of the main event and the matter lends additional strength to the opinion of Miniser Kurino that there can be no hurried armistice.

Minister Kurino who was a prominent participant in the American ceremonies of the new years season was conspicuous at the executive mansion, not only on account of his representative character but also because of his fine appearance in a uniform replete with royal scarlet, bronze and jeweled decorations. He was not averse to speaking of the material resources of Japan to friends who conversed with him during the day.

The war spirit, he says, has not deteriorated the material prosperity of the country the internal resources of which adequately withstands whatever the drain may be upon them for the uses of war. Where, at the opening of the war there was some decline in business a lively lessening of stocks, there was an early recovery which still maintains itself. All parties are united in support of the government and whatever its decision is to be either as to a continuance of hostilities or consenting to an armistice the active patriotism of all classes is so thoroughly widespread as to leave no doubt of the stand that will be taken receiving full endorsement. The work of the army and navy, thinks the Japanese minister, tells for itself. The completeness of these organizations and the magnificent material equipment of each have already proved their standard.

London, Jan. 2.—The Daily Graphic learns from Shanghai that Gen. Sung narrowly escaped being captured by the Japanese near New Chwang.

SEVEN PERSONS INJURED.

Sewer Gas Explosion Causes a Panic in a Chicago Street.

Chicago, Jan. 2.—A building was wrecked and seven people were badly injured here by an explosion of sewer gas. The cover was blown off a manhole at Harrison street and Fifth avenue and the concussion which followed could be heard several blocks away. The Lincoln hotel, a five story tenement house was the nearest building to the explosion. Its front walls were badly cracked, windows and floors were twisted out of place and the structure looks as if it had passed through a severe earthquake.

Mr. Stafford and his wife who are proprietors of the building were sitting in a front room on the second floor and say they were thrown four feet away. A heavy safe on the second floor was thrown from an improvised foundation to the floor. The following persons were injured:

Timothy Garry, Jacob Cohen, John Clark, Terry Van Sky, Henry Worthington, George Hartley, and Patrick Ryan.

Garry was a bar tender in a saloon on the first floor of the house. He was blown ten feet and badly bruised. Cohen was walking on the street. His head was badly crushed and he was taken to the hospital together with Van Skye, who was also on the sidewalk and hit by a flying stone. The other men were in the building and are painfully though not seriously wounded. The pavement for twenty feet around the man-hole was torn up.

THE NEW GUN CARRIAGES.

Proposals Opened and Many Bids Received at the War Department.

Washington, Jan. 2.—Proposals have been opened at the war department for supplying gun carriages for the ten-inch coast defense rifles. Among the bidders were the Pond Machine company of New York; Philadelphia Engineering works; Bethlehem Steel company; Farrell Foundry & Machine company of Ansonia, Conn.; Robert Poole & Son, Baltimore; Wm. Cramp & Sons, Philadelphia; Southwark Foundry & Machinery company, Philadelphia; Welman Machine works, Lebanon, Pa.; Builders Iron foundry, Providence; Wm. Tod & Co., Youngstown, O., and the Morgan Engineering company, Alliance, O.

The bids range in round numbers from $14,000 to $19,00 for each carriage while the bidders were also required to specify a time within which the carriages could be delivered and this clause, which is variously met together with the different amounts named by the bidders, will necessitate careful calculation before a decision as to awards can be made by the department.

The lowest bidders are Pond Machine company of New York at $14,273 each, and the highest the Morgan Engineering company of Alliance, O., $19,278 each.

THE EMPEROR TALKS AGAIN.

He Thinks Germany Will Triumph Over Its Internal Foe.

Berlin, Jan. 2.—The mild weather and bright sunshine attracted large crowds to witness the parade of the Berlin garrison. The troops of the garrison marched through Unten den Linden, halting in front of the arsenal, where the entire staff of officers, including Prince Arnulph of Bavaria, Prince George of Saxony and Prince Leopold of Prussia, were assembled to receive the watchword of the day.

The emperor addressed the officers saying: "We stand in the face of serious times, but as in 1870 when the princes of the German nation stood together in triumph over a foreign enemy, so to-day they stand together in the presence of their royal commander, giving shining proofs of the union of Germany's princes and her people. Germany will also triumph over a more serious internal foe, which is confronting the empire. The army is the fundamental basis of the empire, for the army is the nation armed."

BAD SLEIGHING ACCIDENT.

Three People Killed at a Railroad Crossing in Keene, N. H.

Keene, N. H., Jan. 2.—One of the most shocking railroad accidents that has happened in this vicinity in years occurred last evening. As the 6:03 train on the Fitchburg railroad was coming in, a sleigh containing Charles Brooks, aged 60; his daughter Ada, aged about 25, and Tennis Bergeron, a boy about 15, attempted to cross the tracks at the Water street crossing, when the engine struck the sleigh squarely, throwing it and its occupants nearly one hundred feet, killing all three instantly, although the horse escaped.

Mr. Brooks recently moved here from Sullivan and was building a new house on Wilbur street. His daughter was employed in Lancaster's shoe factory. It is said that this is the third of the Bergeron family killed on a railroad here. The bodies were all badly mangled and were taken to Woodbury & Howard's undertaking rooms.

STILL ANOTHER STORY

Later Reports Increase the Armenian Horrors.

The Most Probable Estimate Is 15,000 Killed and Fifty-five Villages Plundered—The Boston Armenians Thank Mr. Gladstone for His Sympathy and Aid.

Boston, Jan. 2.—Letters have been received by well-known parties in this city from reliable sources in Turkey giving still further testimony regarding the outrages in eastern Turkey. The following letter comes from a city not a great distance from the scene of the outrages. The writer of the letter is a man in whom the highest confidence may be placed, who has spent more than a third of a century in that region and knows the country and people perfectly. This testimony is from a source which is entirely independent of any which has been given before. Later accounts increase, if possible, the horrors of what has taken place.

The letter just received is as follows: The Armenians, oppressed by the Kurds and Turks, said they could not pay taxes to both Kurds and government. Plundered and oppressed by the Kurds they resisted them; there were some killed. Then false reports were sent to Constantinople that the Armenians were in arms in rebellion, orders were sent to the Musher at Erzington to examine them, root and branch. The order read before the army, collected in haste from all the chief cities of eastern Turkey was: "Whoever spares man, woman or child is disloyal." The region was surrounded by soldiers of the army, and 20,000 Kurds also are said to have been massed there. Then they advanced upon the centre, driving the people like a flock of sheep, and continued thus to advance for days. No quarter was given, no mercy shown. Men, women and children were shot down or butchered like sheep. Probably when they were set upon in this way some turned to save their lives and resisted in self defense while those who could fled in all directions, but the majority were slain.

The most probable estimate is 15,000 killed, 55 villages plundered and burned. Women were outraged and then butchered. A priest was taken to the roof of his church and hacked to pieces and set on fire. A large number of women and girls collected in a church were kept for days, violated by the brutal soldiers and then butchered. It is said the number was so large that the blood flowed out of the church door. The soldiers contended over a beautiful girl; they wanted to preserve her, but she too was killed. Every effort is being made and will be made to falsify the facts and pull the wool over the eyes of European governments. But the bloody tale will finally be known. As a confirmation of the report the other day several hundred soldiers were returning fom the seat of war and at a village near us one was heard to say that he alone with his own hand had killed thirty pregnant women. Some, who seem to have some shame for their atrocious deeds, said: "What could we do, we were under orders?"

In consequence of a meeting of the Armenians of Boston, held in Friendship hall last Sunday evening, the following cablegram has been sent to Hon. William E. Gladstone, London, Eng.:

"Armenians of Boston thank you for your sympathy and aid."

Armenians of this city feel that the diplomats of Europe will never take interest in the affairs of their countrymen, unless it is shown that every act in their favor is keenly appreciated, and they take this means of expressing their sincere gratitude for the stand taken by Mr. Gladstone in his speech last week.

Odessa, Jan. 1.—Journals in the Caucasus say that domiciliary visits and searches are still made daily in Armenia, and numerous arrests are made. The local prisons are crowded. The Bitlis prison is filled with Armenians, among them a priest more than 70 years old, who was arrested for refusing to betray his son's hiding place. The Armenians Catholics have appealed to the pope.

Vienna, Jan. 2.—Dispatches from Constantinople tell of numerous arrests throughout Armenia. The whole province is disturbed. Many troops have left Constantinople for various parts of Asia Minor in the last few days. The pretext was that their time had expired, and they were returning home, but there is good reason to believe that they were destined for the military centres, notably Erzinghian. The recall of Abdullah Pasha, the most fearless member of the commission of inquiry, has been cancelled, owing to the porte's anxiety to dispel the unfavorable reports to which it gave rise.

May Be Impeachment Proceedings.

New Haven, Conn., Jan. 2.—The board of police commissioners have voted to accept the report of the investigating committee which has been looking into the acts of Messrs. Gilhuly and Clancy, two of the members of the board. The report will be referred to the council, where, in all probability, impeachment proceedings will be instituted.

Fell on the Cook Stove.

Asbury Park, N. J., Jan. 2.—Mrs. Mary Miller was so severely burned last night that she will probably die. She was cooking supper at her home in West Grove when taken with a fit. She fell forward on the stove and her clothing caught fire. She was badly burned about the face, head, neck breast and arms.

N. Y. A. C. Challenge Accepted.

London, Jan. 2.—The Chronicle says that the London Athletic club has accepted the challenge of the New York Athletic club, issued on Nov. 28 last. There will be nine events, and the matches will, if possible, take place in New York in May.

A Victim of Progress.

St. Louis, Jan. 2.—Charles Yeager, printer, was found dead in a viaduct in Forest park. A letter on his body explained that he had killed himself because typesetting machines had driven him to want.

HEADS AND POINTS.

MACHINES THAT CAN TURN OUT 100,000 PINS A DAY.

In a Single Machine the Pins are Cut from Wire, Headed, Pointed, Sharpened, Polished and Stuck Into Papers in Which They Are Sold.

In a store window was a hollow glass globe filled with pins. The placard beneath read: "Where do all of the pins go? Here's a pound of them. How many in the globe?"

Then followed an announcement that the lucky guesser would receive a necktie. The guesses ranged all the way from 500 to 100,000.

One day a well dressed young Yankee walked into the store and said: "Are all of the pins in the globe of the same size?" He was told that they were. At once he said: "There are 7,800 pins in the globe," and he walked out with a bright red four-in-hand gleaming on his shirt front.

He was a pinmaker, and had worked in a factory where fifty machines made 8,000 pins every minute or nearly 5,000,000 a day. By working 300 days in a year that factory could turn out 1,500,000,000 pins, or about 21 for every man, woman and child in the United States.

People wonder how it is that pins can be sold so cheap. The reason is found in the fact that machines do the work and turn them out too rapidly for them to be counted.

Pins are made of an alloy of copper and zinc—two parts of the first to one part of the second. The metal is first cast in ingots in an iron mould about 6 feet long, 3 inches wide and half as thick. These bars are rolled into sheets about one-eighth of an inch thick. The pressure of the rolls makes the metal inflexible and somewhat brittle, and the bars are annealed or softened by heat and slow cooling several times while being reduced from ingots to sheets. When the sheets have reached the required thinness they are passed through slitting rolls, which slice up the sheets into rods one-eighth of an inch square and these rods are drawn into wire.

The metal, though somewhat stiff, is too soft to spring out straight, and as the drawing reels are of a smaller diameter, the wire is kinky and "set" and must be straightened before it is ready for the pin-making machine. The kinks are taken out of the wire by putting it through a series of small straightening rolls, with horizontal and vertical rolls alternating in the series. The wire is then wound on a large reel which is hung over the wonderful pin-making machine.

In this machine the pin is cut from the wire, headed, pointed, sharpened and polished. It is a complicated, interesting combination of steel fingers, rollers, cams, toggle joints, headers, revolving files and belts. The wire, caught by a pair of rollers, is drawn forward into the machine, and quick as a flash the wire is cut just the right length; then come two raps from a cam and toggle and the head is on the pin.

A steel finger puts the headed blank on a wheel under the heading dies and the pointless pin is carried down between two revolving steel disks. One of them revolves faster than the other, so that the pin is turned around as it travels forward. Just at this point it comes in contact with four revolving files, which point the pin, and then an emery belt puts the first polish on the household necessity. The pins drop from the machine at the rate of 160 a minute and faster and fall into a hopper, from which they are taken to the tinning room.

In passing through the pin-making machine the pins become covered with oil and dirt, and this is removed by putting them into a revolving iron barrel with sawdust, where they are tumbled about for ten minutes and thoroughly scoured. They are then ready to be tinned. For four hours they are boiled in a preparation of pure tin, and are then washed with strong soapsuds to give them a smooth surface. After another tumbling in the sawdust they are ready to be stuck into the papers.

The sticking machine is another ingenious piece of mechanism, for it crimps the paper and sticks in the pins at the same time. The pins are put in a hopper which feeds the sticking machine. An inclined steel plate, furrowed with little "runs" or channels, leads from the hopper to the machine. The pins are caught by revolving steel fingers and pushed forward upon the inclined plate into the "runs." The runs converge to a plate which moves slightly back and forth across the rows of slots. This "cutting-off" plate catches the pins, and when the holes are full a number of small rams or hammers shove the pins into the crimp of the paper, which is formed a second before the pins are stuck in.

Little Enough for the Salary Offered.

"Wanted—Young lady, double entry bookkeeper, stenographer and typewriter, owning her own machine; $5 per week salary to competent person."

In answer to this advertisement, which appeared in a local newspaper a few days ago, a bright Roxborough girl wrote as follows:

"Dear Sir—I would very much like to have the position, and think I can fill the bill. I was educated at Vassar, have had experience as bookkeeper in a large city house, as inclosed testimonials in regard to fitness and honesty verify.

"Can correspond or speak in French, German, Spanish, Italian and Greek, with a smattering of Latin and Hebrew, and have had a supplementary course in a business college. If there are leisure moments, would be willing to teach your offspring cheerfully. I own a good machine which will suit you. I guarantee to keep it in repair at my own expense. Being of an artistic nature could be used in home social circles as pianist. Can amuse babies or help in the kitchen if needed. Will come on trial one month. If not suitable, no charge."—Philadelphia Record.

Baths at Night.

The women who say and think that a daily bath is debilitating should remember that all unusual exercises are weakening, and that it is only by gradually accustoming one's self to them that strength is gained and maintained. Any one who fears the effect of a daily tub bath should begin by taking a daily sponge each morning. Then she should take first two, then three, and so on in increasing numbers, tub baths at night. She will have the night's rest to recover from the effect, and she will soon not only be able to take a tub bath at any time, but she will feel actually uncomfortable without it.

CHILDREN OF THE ESKIMOS.

Queer Lives that Infants Lead Under the Arctic Circle.

They are born in the snow. They are cradled in ice. The shrieking of the north wind is the only lullaby they hear. They live—most of them—in huts that are built of snow, and they go to sea—when the sea is not frozen—in boats of sealskin and bone. They are clad in sealskin and otter, and they wear indescribably warm inner garments of birds' skins—birds' skins dressed with the feathers on.

The Eskimo babies are carried in their mother's hoods in the greater part of the immeuse territory in which their tribes dwell. But in Labrador the babies are carried in the boots of their mothers. These boots have a long pointed flap in front, which is made for this purpose, and which is very much like a snug box, into which the baby can be tightly and cosily squeezed.

"Doesn't his mother's skirts smother him?" His mother wears skirts so very divided that we really need not call them skirts at all. And she wears them well tucked in her boots.

AN ESKIMO BABY.

The Eskimo children are born into the most peaceful, the most orderly, if not the most luxuriantly comfortable community on earth. The Eskimos have no magistrates. They have no laws. Yet they maintain among themselves an ideal good order. Perhaps they find the fierce and constant war that they needs must wage against the elements too exhausting to admit of their voluntarily waging war among themselves. At all events, a quarrel among Eskimos is almost unknown, and when it does occur it never goes further than a difference of opinion, which the disputants settle by separating.

If two members of an Eskimo family do not pull together comfortably, they separate, quietly and definitely. If two sections of an Eskimo tribe fall out, one section moves a few miles away. That is the way in which every Eskimo quarrel terminates. Even the children play together peacefully, and never quarrel among themselves; doubtless because they never see aught that approaches quarrelsomeness among their elders. As soon as an Eskimo baby is born it is sewn into innumerable layers of warm clothing.

Johnson—Tipton.

The Tribune is indebted to a correspondent in Chamberlain, S. D., for the full particulars of the marriage of Mr. Hans Johnson and Miss Ollie Tipton at that place a few days ago. Says the correspondent:

"Those present; seemed to richly enjoy the occasion and, the following, is Elder Babcock's address to the newly wedded pair; right there; as soon as the usual greetings; such as hand shakings, bride kissing, etc., had ceased.

"The Elders address, ran thus:

"God bless you; this Bridegroom; and, also the Bride;
Who now, at this altar, stands close by your side:
These ties are the strongest; and, bind the most sweet
Two persons in one; God's plan; here; how neat.
* * * * *
"Some wives, say they love; but, claim they conceal it;
That; is giving the Devil; a fine chance to steal it;
Friend Ollie; already; you've given Mr. Johnson to see;
That, among all you cherish; the dearest, is he.
"Oh; keep that thought toward him; as long as you live;
And; to you: Mr. Johnson; the advice I would give;—
Is; that; since you are lucky; in finding a mate;
A sweet little woman; may your comfort be great.
"As you are now wed; 'tis your love; makes you smile;
And, may this affection; increase; all the while;
When a month shall be past; I hope you can say,
That; your love is then stronger; than, on wedding day."

We regret that a lack of space forbids the insertion of the Elder's poetical address in full, as the other stanzas are equally good; and we join in hope so eloquently expressed that the lapse of a month, even in South Dakota, may not weaken the ties that bind Mr. and Mrs. Hans Johnson together.—Chicago Tribune.

Bad Sign.

"How's your boy Jeems gettin' along down to Boston?" inquired a Centreville resident of Mrs. Peter Rickets, familiarly known as the Widow Peter.

"Well, Jeems says he's gettin' on fust-rate," answered Mrs. Peter, "an' he's allus been a truthful boy. But there's one thing worrits me, an' I declare I might jest as well out with it, seein' you're sech an old friend.

"He come on from Boston with a colored shirt on, an' a white collar. He brought a white shirt in his bag, so's to appear matched up while he was here; but it come over me jest like a flesh when I stood off to take a good look at him, that my boy Jeems, that had a father that wouldn't owe a cent any more'n he'd steal one—my boy Jeems has fell behind with his washerwoman!"—Philadelphia Record.

Conclusive.

Two men met in the country road, perhaps on the way to and from market.

"How are you, old Ben Russell?" called one.

"Come, now," said the other. "I'll bet you I ain't any older'n you. Tell me what's the earliest recollection you can put your finger on."

"Well," said the other, thinking a moment intently, "the very fust thing I can remember is hearing people say, when you went by, 'There goes old Ben Russell!'"—Philadelphia Record.

[Copyright, 1894, by Bacheller, Johnson & Bacheller.]

"Ain't that about yore riccollection o' how he expressed it?" said McMonigle, pausing now in his recital.

"Yas," said old man Taylor, "he said it three times, I riccollect that ez long ez I live—an' the third time he said 'the yaller hair' he let his arms fall down at his side, an' he sort o' staggered back'ards, an' turned round to Johnnie Burk an' sez he: 'Help me out, please, sir, I feels dizzy.' Do you riccollect how he said that, Dan'l?

"But you're tellin' the story. Don't lemme interrupt you."

"No interruption, Pete. You go on an' tell it the way you riccollect it. I see my pipe has done gone out while I've been talkin'. Tell the truth, I'm most sorry that you all started me on this story to-night. It gives me a spell o' the blues—talkin' it over.

"Pass me them tongs back here, doctor, an' lemme git another coal for my pipe. An' while I've got 'em I'll shake up this fire a little. This stove's ez dull-eyed and pouty ez any other woman ef she's neglected.

"Hungry, too, ain't you, old lady? Don't like wet wood, neither. Sets her teeth on edge. Jest listen at his quar'l while I lay it in her mouth.

"Go on, now, Pete, an' tell the parson the rest o' the story. 'Tain't no more'n right thet a shepherd should know all the ins and outs o' his flock ef he's goin' to take care o' their needs."

"You better finish it, Dan'l," said Taylor. "You've brought it all back a heap better'n I could a-done it."

"Tell the truth, boys, I've got it down to where I hate to go on," replied McMonigle, with feeling. "I've talked about the child now till I can seem to see her little, slim figure comin' down the plank walk the way I've seen her a hundred times, when all the fellers settin' out in front o' the sto'es would slip in an' git their coats on, an' come back—I've done it myself an' me a grandfather.

"Go on, Pete, an' finish it up. I've got the taste o' tobacco smoke now, an' my pipe is like the stove. Ef I neglect her she pouts.

"I left off where ol' Proph finished prophesyin' at the old year party at my house three year ago. I forgot to tell you, parson, thet Mrs. Meredith, she never come to the party—an' Meredith hisself he only come and stayed a few minutes, an' went home count o' the ol' lady bein' by herself—so they wasn't neither one there when the ol' nigger spoke. An' ef they'd ever been told what he said I don't know—though we have got a half dozen smarties in town, thet would 'a' busted long ago ef they hadn't 'a' told it I don't doubt.

"Go on, now, Pete, an' finish. After Proph had got done talkin' of co'se hand shakin' commenced, an' everybody was supposed to shake hands with everybody else. I reckon, parson, there knows about that—but you might tell it anyhow."

"Of co'se, parson he knows about the handshakin'," said Taylor, taking up the story, "because you was here last year, parson. You know that it's the custom in Simpkinsville, at the old year party, for everybody to shake hands at twelve o'clock at the comin in of the new year. It's been our custom time out o' mind. Folks thet'll have some fallin' out an' maybe not be speakin' 'll come forward an' shake hands an' make up—start the new year with a clean slate.

"Why, ef 'twasn't for that, I donno what we'd do. Some of our folks is so techy an' high strung—an' so many o' 'em kin, which makes it that much worse—thet ef 'twasn't for the New Year handshaking, why in a few years we'd be ez bad ez a deaf and dumb asylum.

"But to tell the story. I declare, Dan'l, I ain't no hand to tell a thing so ez to bring it befo' yo' eyes like you can. I'm feerd you'll have to carry it on."

And so old man McMonigle, after affectionately drawing a few puffs from his pipe, laid it on the fender before him, and took up the tale.

"Well," he began as usual, "I reckon thet rightly speakin' this is about the end of the first chapter.

"The handshakin' passed off friendly enough, everybody jinin' in, though there was women thet 'lowed thet they had the cold shivers when they shuck the city feller's hand, half expectin' to tackle a birdclaw. An' I know thet wife an' me—although understand, parson, we none o' us suspicioned no harm—we was glad when the party broke up, an' everybody was gone—the nigger's voice seemed to ring in our ears so.

"Well, sir, the second chapter o' the story I reckon it could be told in half a dozen words, though I s'pose it holds misery enough to make a book.

"I never would read a book thet didn't end right; in fact, I don't think the law ought to allow sech to be printed. We get enough wrong endin's in life, an' the only good book makin' is, in my opinion, is to ketch up all sech stories an' work 'em over.

"Ef I could set down an' tell May Day Meredith's story to some book writer thet'd take it up where I leave off, an' bring her back to us, she could even be raised from the dead in a book of need be, my Lord, how I'd love to read it, an' try to b'lieve it was true! I'd like him to work the ol' nigger in at the end, too, ef he didn't think himself above it. A ol' harmless, half-crazy nigger, thet's been movin' round amongst us all for years, is ez much missed ez anybody else when he drops out, nobody knows how. I miss Proph' jest the same ez I miss thet ol' struck-by-lightnin' sycamo' tree thet Judge Towns has had cut out of the co't-house yard. My mother had my gran'pa's picture framed out o' sycamo' balls, gethered out o' that tree forty year ago.

"But you see I'm makin' every excuse to keep from goin' on with the story, an' ef it's got to be told, well—

"Whether somebody told the Merediths about the nigger's prophesy, an' they got excited over it, an' forbid the city feller the house, I don't know, but he never was seen goin' there after that night, though he stayed in town right along for two weeks, at the end of which time he disappeared from the face o' the earth, an' she along with him.

"An' that's all the story, parson. That's three year ago lackin' two weeks, an' nobody ain't seen or heard o' May Day Meredith from that day to this.

"Of co'se girls have run away with men, an' it turned out all right—but they wasn't married men. Nobody s'picioned he was married tell it was all over, an' Harry Conway he found it out in St. Louis, an' it's been found to be true. An' there's a man living in Texarkana thet testified thet he was called in to witness what he b'lieved to be a genuine weddin', where the preacher claimed to come from Little Rock, an' he married May Day to that man, a-standin' in the door in brown dress she run away in. She was married by the 'Piscopal prayer book, too, which is the only thing I felt real hard against May Day for consentin' to—she being well raised, a hard shell Baptist.

"But o' co'se the man thet could git a girl to run away with him could easy get her to change her religion."

"Hold up there, Dan'l!" interrupted old man Taylor. "Hold on there! Not always! It's a good many years sense my ol' woman run away to marry me, but she was a Methodist, an' Methodist she's turned me, though I've been dipped, thank God!"

"Well, of co'se, there's exception. An' I didn't compare you to the man I'm a-talkin' about, nohow. Besides Methodist an' 'Piscopal are two different things," returned McMonigle.

"But tellin' my story—or at least sense I've done told the story, I'll tell parson all I know about the old nigger, Proph, which is mighty little.

"It was jest three days after May Meredith run away thet I was ridin' through the woods twixt here an' Clay Bank, an' who did I run against but old Proph'—walkin' along in the brush talkin' to hisself ez usual.

"Well, sir, I stopped my horse, an' called him up an' talked to him, an' tried to draw him out—ast him how come he to prophesy the way he done, an' how he knowed what was comin', but, sir, I couldn't get no satisfaction out o' him—not a bit. He 'lowed thet he only spoke ez it was given him to speak, an' the only thing he seemed interested in was the stranger's name, an' he ast me to say it for him over an' over—he repeatin' it after me. An' then he ast me to write it for him, an' he put the paper I wrote it on in his hat. He didn't know B from a bull's foot, but I s'pose he thought maybe if he put it in his hat it might strike in."

"Like ez not he 'lowed he could git somebody to read it out to him," suggested the doctor.

"Like ez not., Well, sir, after I had give him the paper he commenced to talk about huntin'—had a bunch o' birds in his hands then, an' give 'em to me, blowin' all the time he hadn't had much luck lately, 'count o' his pistol bein' sort o' out o' order. 'Lowed thot he took sech a notion to hunt with his pistol thet twasn't no fun shootin' at long range, but somehow he couldn't depend on his pistol shootin' straight.

"Took it out o' his pocket while he was standin' there, an' commenced showin' it to me. An', sir, would you believe it? While we was standin' there talkin' he give a quick turn, fired all on a sudden up into a tree, an' befo' I could git my breath, down dropped a squir'l right at his feet. Never see sech shootin' in my life. An' he wasn't no mo' excited over it than nothin'. Jest picked up the squir'l ez unconcerned ez you please, an', sez he: 'Yas, she done it that time—but she don't always do it. Con't depend on her.'

"Then, somehow, he brought it round to ask me ef I wouldn't loand him my revolver. Jest to try it an' see if he wouldn't have better luck. 'Lowed that he'd fetch it back quick ez he got done with it.

"Well, sir, o' co'se I loaned it to the ol' nigger—an' took his—then an' there. I give it to him loaded, all six barrels, 'n', sir, would you believe it? No livin' soul has ever laid eyes on ol' Prophet from that day to this.

"I'm mighty feered he's wandered way off som'ers an' shot hisself accidentally—an' never was found. Them revolvers is mighty resky weepons ef a person ain't got experience with 'em.

"So that's all the story, parson. Three days after May Day went he disappeared. an' of co'se he's, livin' along at Merediths all these years, an' being so 'tached to May Day, and prophesying about her like he done, you can see how one name brings up another. So when I think about one I seem to see the other."

"Didn't Harry Conway say he see the ol' man in St. Louis onc't an' thet he let on he didn't know him—wouldn't answer when he called him Proph?" said old man Conway.

"One o' Harry's cock an' bull stories," answered McMonigle. "He might o' saw some ol' nigger o' Proph's build, but how would that old nigger git there?—anybody's common sense would tell him better'n that. No, he's dead—no doubt about that."

"I suppose no one has ever looked for the old man?" the parson asked.

"Oh, yas, he's been searched for. We've got up two parties an' rode out clair into the swamp lands twic't—but there wasn't no sign of him.

"But May Day—nobody has ever went after her, of co'se. She left purty well escorted an' ef her own folks never follered her, 'twasn't nobody else's business. Her mother ain't never mentioned her name sense she left—to nobody."

"Yas," interrupted the doctor, "an' some has accused her o' hardheartedness, but when I see a woman's head turn from black to white in three months' time, like hers done, I don't say her heart's hard, I say it's broke.

"They keep a-sendin' for me to see her, but I can't do her no good. She's failed tur'ble last six months.

"Ef somethin' could jest come upon her sudden to rouse her up—ef the house would burn down an' she have to go out 'mongst other folks—or ef they was some way to git folks there, whether she wanted them or not—

"Tell the truth, I been a-thinkin' about somethin'. It's been on my mind all day. I don't know ez it would do, but I been a-thinkin' ef I could get Meredith's consent for the Simpkinsville folks to come out in a body—

"Ef he'd allow it, an' the folks would be willin' to go out there to-night for the old year party—take their fiddle an' cakes an' things along, an' surprise her—she'd be obliged to be polite to 'em; she couldn't refuse to meet all her friends for the midnight handshakin', an' it might be the savin' o' her. Three years has passed. There's no reason why one trouble should bring another. We've all had our share o' trials this year, an' I reckon everyone o' us here has paid for a tombstone in three years, an' I believe ef we'd all meet together an' go in a body out there—

"Ef you say so, I'll ride out an' talk it over with Meredith. What's your opinion, parson?"

"My folks will join you heartily, I'm sure," replied the parson, warmly. "They did expect to have the crowd over at Bradfield's to-night, but I know they'll be ready to give in to the Merediths."

And this is how it came about that the Merediths' house, closed for three years, opened its doors again.

Spoiled the Skating.

Yesterday afternoon as a happy crowd of skaters had gathered to the number of one hundred and fifty to enjoy the ice between Westervelt avenue and Elm street, Warren Engine Co., appeared on the scene with their apparatus and despite the protests of the skaters to which was added the request of the owner of the adjacent property cut a hole in the ice and spoiled the afternoon's sport. The water from the hole flooded over the surrounding ice and the angry and disappointed skaters either went further up stream or took off their skates and started for home.

The young woman with a strange infatuation for the clerk in the gun store, called to see him in a wild mood. He had grown cold, as men are apt to do when there is some one else to keep the fires up, and she had come in to have a talk with him.

"Give me a revolver," she asked after she had not received full satisfaction.

"What do you want with it?" he inquired coyly, for he knew that danger lurked in that sort of a thing, and that it sometimes had a way of coming out of the muzzle of it in a demonstrative and dangerous fashion.

"I'm going to kill myself with it," she sobbed.

"Oh," and he appeared to feel relieved. "What size caliber do you think you will need?"

"A forty-four caliber," she replied as one knowing something about those things, as indeed she did, having heard him talk shop so often.

"My dear young woman," he protested, "don't do that. As sure as you do, some of those heartless reporters, who write up those things, will say you took that size to match your age. Here, here's a twenty-two; try that."

It was a cold-blooded way he had of talking, but he was no fool, and the young woman got so mad that she not only left the place, but shook the young man forever.—Detroit Free Press.

Unfortunately Placed.

Bishop Wilberforce was much beloved in Yorkshire, and in Hull the house where his boyhood was spent has always been regarded with reverence. With the Wilberforce monument, however, which stands in St. John's church, an absurd incident is connected, one which vastly amused the good bishop. By some unlucky chance the statue of William Wilberforce, the great man on the top of the column, was so placed as to face some noted wine and spirit vaults, while its back was turned toward St. John's. Some sailors saw the joke first and managed to scribble on the pedestal:

"So, Billy Wilberforce, thou'st left us in the lurch: Turn'd thy face to the ginshop, and thy back to the church."

TRADESMEN MEET.

They Seek to Establish a Uniform Scale for Retailing Flour.

A largely attended meeting of the leading tradesmen handling the Pillsbury flour in Plainfield, Westfield, Fanwood, Dunellen and other nearby towns was held in Trade Temple last evening.

The meeting convened for the purpose of discussing a uniform price for the Pillsbury products, which at present are sold in many instances below cost.

The New York representatives of the Pillsbury interests addressed the gathering, and urged the advisability of a uniform price which would secure a reasonable margin to the dealers and stated that by the middle of the present month a universal schedule would be adopted by all dealers or agents who handle the flour throughout the United States and Europe. No demands have been made by the Pillsbury Company, but it is understood that dealers who refuse to accept the schedule will be unable to obtain the product. The local handlers will doubtless fall into line at once.

AMUSEMENTS.

Minnie Lester All Next Week.

Commencing next Monday evening, Jan. 7, Miss Minnie Lester, together with her own company, band and orchestra, will be at Music Hall in a repertoire of new plays and former successes. Monday evening the play will be "Annette the Dancing Girl". This is the play in which Miss Lester made such a "hit" last season. The same famous orchestra remains with the organization, but new faces will be seen in the cast, as Miss Lester has surrounded herself with an entirely new stage company, which, it is claimed, is superior in every respect to that of last season. Women's tickets for Monday night will be distributed shortly and are worth 30 cents each if properly used. Look out for them. Despite the size of the show the prices will remain at 10, 20 and 30 cents. Box office open daily.

Muhlenberg Hospital.

At the last meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary Board of Muhlenberg Hospital, held Dec. 28, the following resolutions were passed:

Resolved, To extend a vote of thanks to all who participated in the Christmas festivities at the Hospital and by their kind and valuable assistance contributed to make the entertainment for the enjoyment of our patients a marked success.

Resolved, To express special gratitude to the following friends of the institution:

To Mrs. Freeman and her choir of young ladies who in their usual highly satisfactory manner provided the musical part of the programme; also to Miss Nellie Whiton, who rendered a variety of beautiful violin solos, and to Elmer Runyon, who with his ever pleasing tenor voice delighted the audience with a number of choice songs. To William Madden for his untiring and faithful services, having again as in many previous years proved such a valuable help to the ladies committee in dressing the Christmas tree. To our storekeepers and other benevolent friends who so liberally sent in contributions, especially the kind donors of a barrel of flour, boxes of oranges, turkeys, and other provisions.

And last but not least to the editors of our daily papers for their encouraging words and accurate accounts of the entertainment. To all, once more, sincere and grateful thanks.

A Copper and Lead Party.

Among the novel entertainments put forth by the versatile borough folks New Year's Eve to celebrate the old year out and the new year in, was one provided at the residence of Joseph R. Hall on Washington avenue by his son-in-law Henry M. Western. Each guest on entering the room was furnished with a neatly prepared oblong card, at the top of which was a copper cent, snugly concealed in a small envelope. Under this followed a series of questions, numbered up to twenty-six, which were to be answered on the reverse side of the card with a lead pencil.

The answers were to be suggested by the features and letters on both sides of the penny. For instance, What did our forefathers strive for? Liberty, etc. Prizes were offered to both ladies and gentlemen to those guessing the highest number correctly also a progressive prize to those who came next highest. Each party of the company was supposed to act independently of the others and no conferring or exchanging of answers was permitted, but this rule, however, did not appear to work well as far as two betrothed couple were concerned. The contest created a good deal of merriment, and the representative of The Press came in second best, much to the delight of the company, which inferred that The Press ought to be first in everything. About fourteen couple were present and all joined in singing Auld Lang Syne when the new year was announced.

INDIANS.

Chiefs of Paugh-Caugh-Naugh-Sinque Raised to Their Stumps.

A large and enthusiastic party of Indians assembled in the Paugh-Caugh-Naugh-Sinque wigwam last evening to witness the ceremonies attending the raising up of the chiefs to their respective stumps for the current term of office.

District Deputy Westlake of Elizabeth and his staff performed the work in a most satisfactory manner. Following the exercises an hour was pleasantly spent in listening to several very interesting "talks" from the visiting deputation and the newly raised chieftains. After the council fire was quenched Paugh-Caugh-Naugh-Sinque Council, No. 1934, of Haymakers, went into session.

A commission, accompanied by a cordial letter to the new companions, was submitted from E. J. Lake, President of the State Haymakers Association. President Lake conferred great honor on the new loft by appointing P. C. H. John H. Carney the deputy-president of this district, and when his commission was read Plainfield's popular little Dutchman received an invitation in true Haymakers style. This evening in Sangerbund Hall an invitation entertainment, reception and dance will be given by that growing young tribe No. 193, which, though not yet a year old, is among the largest, most popular, and most influential in the State of New Jersey, embracing, as is well-known, many of Plainfield's leading citizens.

AGAINST CARELESS SHOOTING.

Grand Jurors Urged to Investigate the Reckless Handling of Firearms.

When the oaths had been administered to the grand jurors at the opening of the December term of court in Elizabeth yesterday, Judge VanSyckel briefly charged the grand jurors in reference to the recent shooting accidents in Plainfield and the county. In substance he said:

"The Court has been informed that since the last term three citizens of the county have died from wounds received through the careless use of firearms by boys. This is a startling fact and shows the absence of that care and restraint which should be exercised by parents and guardians over their children. You, gentlemen, will recognize the importance and necessity of taking some action whereby human life may be more secure. The use of firearms in a careless manner, causing injury to another, makes the person amenable to the criminal law, and if death results the offender is guilty of manslaughter.

"I am informed that these boys had no intent to do any harm. If there was this intention, the offense would be murder, but the absence of such intention reduces the grade of crime to manslaughter.

"This is a disagreeable duty which is devolved upon the Court and grand jury, but a due regard for the safety of persons and human life impels us to take such action as will be a warning to boys, and to their parents and guardians, and prevent the handling of weapons which are a constant menace to the lives of their companions and friends. The prosecutor will submit the evidence in these cases, and it will be your duty to take such action, after consideration, as the facts justify."

Judge VanSyckel mentioned no other matter as a special charge, and the grand jurors retired to their room. The Plainfielders on the jury are John T. Fritts, William Thompson, George W. Rockfellow and William H. Moore.

Shot in the Hip.

Harry Dodwell, the seventeen-year-old son of Conductor Dodwell of the Central, while removing a revolver from his pocket New Year's morning caught the hammer, discharged the weapon, and received the bullet in his hip. Dr. Brakeley found the bullet imbedded in the fleshy part of the thigh. The plucky young man started for school after the operation.

There is good reason for the popularity of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. Davis & Buzard, of West Monterey, Clarion Co., Pa., say; "It has cured people that our physicians could do nothing for; we persuaded them to try a bottle of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy and now they recommend it with the rest of us." 25 and 50c bottles for sale at Reynolds's Pharmacy, Park and North avenues. T. S. Armstrong, manager.

Karl's Clover Root, the great blood purifier, gives freshness and clearness to the complexion and cures constipation; 25c 50c, $1. Sold by all druggists.

JOHN BURNS AT BOSTON

He Compares English with American Labor.

Says That Mechanics in England Secure More Days' Work in the Year Laborers No Better Off Here Than on the Other Side—Cost of Living Much Higher.

Boston, Jan. 3.—John Burns, the English labor advocate, when questioned as to how the condition of labor in this country compared with conditions of labor in Great Britain said:

"I hardly think that there is so great a difference as appears on the surface. Your mechanics may draw higher wages, but there is in this country a greater intensity of labor. Take the bricklayer for illustration. In New York and Chicago and other cities I went up on buildings in process of erection and watched the men work. They were wrought up to the highest tension. Every man was doing his utmost.

"I asked the foremen how much the men were paid and he replied, 'From forty to fifty cents an hour.' But see what the men have to do and how they work.

"Men do not work so in the old country. Even our mechanics in the building trades in England secure more days' work in the year, notwithstanding that we have a few more holidays than you have in this country. The season for your 'out-of-door' mechanics is from six to seven months.

"So you see when you take off the gilt of high wages from your gingerbread of lost time and greater intensity of labor, even your mechanic is not much better off than is his prototype of my country. As for your laborers, they are no better off than they are in Great Britain. The textile workers in America are no better off so far as I am able to judge.

"The cost of living is higher in this country, and for a good house the workman in this country pays a higher rate than he would be obliged to pay in England. In this country you are getting the maximum of production from your workmen through your intensity of labor and labor-saving machinery. There is an international universality of production and compensation for labor going on.

"It is leveling up or down process as you please.

"In this country after wages have been high, it is, perhaps, a leveling down process. In some other countries it may be a leveling up process.

"In any event, a thorough organization of labor is needed and a wise policy is demanded in order that the grinding down process may not take place.

"I am confident that the workingmen in the future will, aided by the public spirited and humane society and guided by intelligence on his own part, make the leveling process up in all countries.

"I am as much interested in the problem of municipal reform as in the general labor movement.

"Now, if municipal reform shall be carried out it will be impossible for some of the boodlers who have attached themselves to the American labor movement to pursue their present occupations. They see this, and hence their desire to misrepresent and weaken the general effort to reform anything.

"This is the basis of the misrepresentations concerning Mr. Holmes and myself."

Mr. Burns is positive that the municipalities are to be reformed; that political corruption is to be reduced to the minimum, and is confident that the honest and sincere and intelligent members of the trades unions are to assist in bringing about this much-desired result.

FATAL TENEMENT FIRE.

Mother and Two Children Burned to a Crisp.

New York, Jan. 3.—Three lives were sacrificed yesterday in a fire at No. 25 Pitt street. The victims were Lena Lehman, 24 years of age, and her two children, Sarah and Henry, aged respectively two years, and three months.

The fact that lives were lost in the fire was not discovered until some time after it was extinguished when firemen found the three bodies, burned to a crisp, lying beneath a heap of debris in the turn of a stairway on the third floor.

The woman lived on the fourth floor and was trying to escape to the street when she and her infants perished in the flames.

Foglia had fled but was arrested at Natchez, Miss. He declares his wife committed suicide.

An Insane Son's Deed.

SUFFERING AT OKLAHOMA.

Women Without Wraps and Shoes and the Thermometer at Zero.

Boston, Jan. 3.—The circle of suffering in parts of the west is widening. It includes the Cherokee strip in Oklahoma, which was opened for settlement a year ago. The country is emphatically new. The missionaries of the Congressional Home Missionary society, in forwarding special correspondence relating to the situation, states there is special need of clothing. With the thermometer below zero, there were thirteen men at a religious service who wore no overcoats and were known not to own any. Some of the women were without wraps of any kind. A mother and daughter alternately wear the same pair of shoes.

Women have been found barefoot at home, not possessing any kind of an old shoe. One home missionary writes as follows:

"I have no means whatever. We have no members who are able to do anything. Out of my limited amount of $125 per quarter I have divided with two or three of our families to keep them from absolute suffering. But I can't do anything more. Think the strip, which is only a year old, will be in a much better condition in another year, as they will raise considerable crops. They will be sod crops, of course, but will help. A meeting has been held to petition congress for help, but we can't wait for congressional action. It takes every cent our ladies' society can raise to get books, keep up the Sabbath school and purchase fuel for our church. The building is new and not yet furnished. The ladies recently purchased a stove. The blizzard struck us Christmas, since which time some families have suffered simply for want of clothing of any description."

The Home Missionary society has already forwarded clothing to these sufferers, and will gladly be the almoner of the public in so doing.

VON WALDERSEE HONORED.

Order of Black Eagle Personally Presented by the Emperor.

Berlin, Jan. 3.—The decoration of Count von Waldersee with the Order of the Black Eagle has been officially gazetted.

The North German Gazette says the decoration was personally handed to General von Waldersee by the emperor, who addressed him in the most cordial manner.

In his speech to the officers assembled in front of the arsenal the emperor impressed upon them the desirability of their observing the greatest economy in the matter of their expenditures. His majesty highly praised the Japanese, who, he said, had for many years been slowly preparing for action and were now showing great endurance and military enthusiasm.

General von Werder, who was absent from the gathering, has tendered his resignation to the emperor.

The General Anzriger says that Prince Hohenlohe accepted the chancellorship upon the condition that he was to retain it only until the passage of the anti-revolution and tax reform bills, when he should be relieved, his successor having already been agreed upon by the kaiser and Prince Hohenlohe. It is generally believed that the succeeding chancellor will be General von Waldersee.

CATTLE MEN ALARMED.

Closing of Antwerp to American Beef Causes a General Protest.

Chicago, Jan. 3.—The packers and shippers of the cattle and dressed beef for export in this city are much alarmed over the latest embargo action of the European authorities, the closing of Antwerp to American beef. They were indignant and determined to protest against the embargo as an outrage as well as a vital blow at the cattle raising industry of the country. They declared that the sugar schedule in the Gorman-Wilson bill was responsible for the closing of the continental ports and that the pleuro-pneumonia excuse was only a subterfuge.

All the livestock exchanges in the west will take concerted action for the purpose of prevailing on congress to bring about by legislation a removal of the embargo.

Nelson Morris, the only Chicago packer who ships to the continent, said there was no question but that the embargoes were intended for retaliation only and that the restrictions of the French government meant practical prohibition.

WILL LIKELY DISAGREE

The China-Japan Peace Negotiations Threatened.

Believed That the Japs Will Decline To Make Further Postponement of Arrangements to Await for Mr. Foster—The Difficulty May Be Settled Before His Arrival.

Washington, Jan. 3.—Danger threatens the peace negotiations between China and Japan and from present indications it is exceedingly probable that hostilities may be renewed with even greater vigor, and the cry "On to Pekin" once more become the slogan of the Japanese forces. Despite a prevailing belief to the contrary it is not unlikely that the Japanese government will decline to make further postponement of the actual commencement of the negotiations in order to await the arrival of Mr. John W. Foster, the Chinese advisory counsel, and it is even probable that arrangements for the settlement of the dispute will have been completed before Mr. Foster reaches Hiroshima, where the representatives of both the warring powers will meet. Mr. Foster will sail from Vancouver on January 6, providing he is not snowbound, and is due in Yokohama January 19 or 20. Two days will give him ample time to reach Hiroshima so that the Chinese cannot ask for a postponement after the 22d inst. The two Chinese ambassadors of peace are due in Shanghai on January 6 and expect to reach Hiroshima on the 9th, and the probabilities are that they will be asked to begin the negotiations without delay. The danger that threatens the settlement, which has seemed such a certainty, will arise at this point, for the Japanese government will refuse, without doubt, to agree to any temporizing on the plea that Mr. Foster has not arrived and that the Chinese ambassadors cannot proceed without his assistance. It may be stated with some degree of positiveness that a direct declination by the Chinese envoys to begin the negotiations until Mr. Foster reaches Hiroshima will result in positive disagreement and the breaking off of the overtures, which will place the possibilities for peace further away than ever and cause the Japanese forces to push their way with greater vigor toward the Chinese capital. In that event nothing short of the fall of Pekin is likely to put an end to hostilities.

It has been known for some time that the Japanese government is suspicious of the good faith of their enemies in the overtures for a suspension of the war. First came the Detring affair in which Mr. Detring was sent to Japan ostensibly for the purpose of making terms of peace, but really armed only with "a letter from the Chinese court" to use his own expression, directing him to make "inquiry" into the prospects for a settlement. When Mr. Detring's mission failed, the overtures on which the present negotiations are based were made by China to Japan through Mr. Denby, the American minister at Pekin, and Mr. Dun, the American minister at Tokio. Japan expressed a willingness to treat with China if the Pekin government would send an ambassador, duly accredited and armed with full power to negotiate a peace treaty. To this the Chinese government sent answer that it could hardly agree to such a proposition until it knew the basis on which the Japanese wished the arrangement for peace to be made. Already inclined to look with suspicion on the Chinese professions of good faith, the Japanese government found in this answer ample confirmation of its growing belief that the Chinese were attempting to ascertain what their enemies would seek to exact from them as indemnity in order to be prepared with arguments to secure a modification, and it was for this reason that Viscount Mutsu, the Japanese minister for foreign affairs, declined to have further dealings with Pekin on the subject until the peace ambassador was appointed. After some delay China appointed not one, but two envoys, and it was thought that the negotiations would begin in a very short time. But a few days ago the appointment of Mr. Foster was announced as counsel to the Chinese ambassadors, and it is believed that the Chinese envoys will ask Viscount Mutsu to suspend the commencement of actual negotiations until Mr. Foster has arrived at the place of meeting.

The Japanese peace commissioners are not likely to give any formal recognition to Mr. Foster. He will certainly not be allowed to attend the sittings of the commission, provided he arrives at Hiroshima before its business is concluded, and if frequent requests for adjournment are made by the two Chinese envoys in order that they may consult with him, the Japanese commissioners will probably refuse to proceed further unless these requests cease.

Mr. Kurino, the minister of Japan to the United States, said to-day that the statement that Mr. John W. Foster received official notice from the Japanese government that he would be cordially welcomed to Japan as one of the Chinese representatives in the peace negotiations was erroneous. No such notice has been given and Mr. Foster has not been officially recognized by Japan. Although Mr. Foster is a friend of Viscount Mutsu, the minister for foreign affairs, the latter will not allow personal considerations to cause him to extend any unusual favor to the representative of Japan's enemies.

People Who Weigh and Compare

Know and get the best. Cottolene, the new vegetable shortening, has won a wide and wonderful popularity. At its introduction it was submitted to expert chemists, prominent physicians and famous cooks. All of these pronounced a natural, healthful and acceptable food-product, better than lard for every cooking purpose.

The success of Cottolene is now a matter of history. Will you share in the better food and better health for which it stands, by using it in your home?

METROPOLITAN NOTES.

Interesting Facts and Opinions Chronicled by the Daily Press of New York.

The subject of rapid transit is again being considered by a commission consisting of Alexander E. Orr, the President; Seth Low, John Claflin, William Steinway, and John H. Inman.

The latest scheme for underground traffic is presented by Chief Engineer W. B. Parsons, who estimates the cost of building at sixty-six millions of dollars. It is proposed to traverse the entire length of New York by an underground road as soon as a feasible scheme shall be presented. Above Fourteenth street the underlying rock comes close to the surface, and tunnelling can be carried on through this with comparative cheapness and expedition, either by opening the surface of the streets or by working entirely under ground. Below Fourteenth street the rock lies deeper, and over it are beds of unstaple sands. The great buildings which line Broadway would render tunnelling through these sands at any great depth a very unsafe operation. Along a great part of this route, too, sidewalk vaults extend to the curb line, and these would have to be cut into and a part of them occupied in order to get room for a four-track road such as has been advocated and provisionally adopted. The practical impossibility of making such a subway without tearing up the whole street and stopping traffic on the cable road has been admitted.

The Wall street swindlers operate under names that are calculated to deceive persons with whom they deal. Nearly every well known name in the financial world has been slightly distorted and adopted by the bucket shop manipulators, who operate what they call "investment combinations and discretionary pools." Such names, for instance, as Drexel, Baring, Morgen, and Vanderbilt. They operate almost entirely through the mails, and it may be possible that the authorities who are making such strenuous efforts to discourage them may succeed in reaching them through the United States laws. An illustration of the methods adopted by these concerns is furnished by a recent scheme of one of them to entrap the clerks of a big insurance company in this city. By some means or other the swindlers got hold of the names and addresses of the clerks, upward of 1,000 in number, and for several weeks each clerk has been receiving at his private address an artfully worded circular asking him to contribute anywhere from $25 to $1,000 to a pool which it was asserted was sure to make money. The letter says: "We assure you that you will make a fortune within six months if you will turn your savings over to us. There is absolutely no risk in the matter. By massing together the money of many small investors into one large sum we are able to operate exactly as do Addison Cammack and George Gould.—N. Y. Sun.

New York never does things half way and she has a perfect right to be proud of herself in that regard. Whether it's submitting to Tammany or whipping Tammany, or doing or undoing other things too numerous to mention, she does them in a whole-hearted, open-handed sort of way that is very exasperating to would-be rivals. And now she has set another example of broad gauge policy in giving the stranger within her gates a chance to view 23 miles of her attractions and points of interests for five cents. That is a rate that for mileage alone cannot be approached in the whole world. It would be a remarkable thing to ride along that many miles of prairie for that price, but when one can ride that distance through the metropolis of America for a nickel, it is something to be classified in the world's wonders. The trip begins at 155th Street and Eighth Avenue and makes a circuit of Manhattan Island by way of the Battery.—Advertiser.

James Gordon Bennett will soon be back in New York. Although the famous owner of the New York Herald has a perfectly appointed private editorial room in his new building, he has appeared in it, I think, but once or twice, and that a year ago. Yet few editors know the inner workings of his newspaper more thoroughly. Mr. Bennett may be at Baden Baden, or Monaco, or Paris, or Prague, but he keeps in touch with his paper by making the cables under the ocean hum. Mr. Bennett looks more like his famous father than he once did. There is gray in his hair and mustache, and his features have resolved into the strong lines that marked the elder Bennett's features. Altogether, the Bennett of to-day looks a much better man than he did fifteen years ago. For some reason he avoids New York and Newport. A good many years ago he set a fast pace for the young bloods in both places.—N. Y. World.

The testimony brought out by the Lexow investigation may well startle a community long accustomed to sensations from this source. In all the hearings before the committee there has been no scene more dramatic, no revelation more startling or damning, than when Captain Creeden, in full uniform, displaying the insignia of thirty years' service, was moved to confess, with deep feeling and reluctance, that he had paid a bribe of fifteen thousand dollars for the captaincy he now holds, and that he gave this with the understanding and intention that it was to go to the Commissioner who appointed him and who now by the appointment of a Tammany Mayor sits as a criminal magistrate on the bench of one of the city's police courts. This extraordinary confession was followed and corroborated by the reluctant confession of the go-between, a political heeler and saloon keeper, who paid over the bribe money and secured the appointment.—N. Y. Sun.

WASHINGTON NEWS.

BIG TOM REED WEARS CLOTHES THAT DO NOT FIT HIM.

Congressman English Has Faith in American Manufacture and the New South. The Persistency of the Seekers After Places.

There is no use in denying the fact that Tom Reed of Maine, while a pretty big man physically, is growing in greatness every day. I recently had an opportunity to see him at very close range. There is a magnetism about him that is rare for a politican. He speaks frankly in private as well as in public. He tells a good story, and, better than all this he is a splendid listener. Somehow, you feel when he comes into a gathering of men as though an intellectual giant had stepped in out of somewhere and made his presence felt. His face is as babyish as the caricaturist have pictured it. His head is shaped like a dome. His eyes sparkle with good nature, and his cheeks are alive with health. I saw him walking through the corridor of the hotel the other day with a small derby hat perched on the back of his head, an overcoat that seemed much too small for him, and trousers at least a couple of inches too short. He moved along as gracefully as an elephant on parade, paying no heed to those ill-bred people who stood in rows and gaped at him. There is no style in his manner or in his dress, but when it comes to brains, he can probably discount any of the people he came in contract with, and that is saying a good deal.

One of the most disagreeable things that a Congressman has to contend with here is the constant and tireless importunities of office seekers. Many a Congressman comes to Washington full of ideas as to how he will make history on the floor of the House, but soon finds his time so occupied in running from one department to another hunting places for persistent constituents that he has no time to make a reputation as a statesman in the halls of Congress. A Democratic Congressman who was defeated for re-election last month remarked to me the other day that he was glad he had not been returned as now he would be rid of the annoyance of hunting patronage. Members of Congress who are so fortunate as to come from distant states are not troubled as much as those from states near the capital. People in the neighboring districts of Maryland and Virginia do not confine their efforts to writing letters but often come to Washington to press their claim in person. They besiege the Congressman at his house, and if he escapes them there he is pursued to the capitol. Congressman Meredith of Virginia, whose district is only separated from Washington by the Potomac river, is a much sought for man in these days. A number of his constituents, when they desire to see him, do not go through the formality of paying railroad fare, but simply walk across the long bridge and up to the Capitol. The other day Mr. Meredith, after a most harrassing interview with a persistent constituent, who had walked over from Virginia to see him, was relating his woes to a brother Congressman and sighing for the restful obscurity of an ordinary citizen, when it was suggested that he follow the plan of General Sherman and burn the bridges. "Burn the bridges," echoed Mr. Meredith, "that would do no good. They would swim the Potomac at high tide.

Business throughout the country may not be improving quite so rapidly as many desire, but one thing is certain, the march of progress made by American manufacturers is going steadily onward. Each year and each month records the opening up of new markets for American goods, and our manufacturers are underbidding their rivals in the old world. Congressman English of California gave me a good illustration of this. "I have a friend," he said, "a young Californian, who is the superintendent of the largest diamond digging concern in South Africa. The company that he represents recently made up its mind to put in extensive new machinery, and advertised for bids for it in England, France, Germany and the United States. A Chicago firm underbid all the rest and was awarded the contract. Another case that was brought to my attention the other day is worthy of mention. The Japanese Government recently awarded an enormous contract for iron pipe to another Chicago firm. It view of these things it is little wonder that I believe American manufacturers will in a short time be able to compete with the world." Mr. English, who is an expert and successful business man, is a great believer in the new South. He has recently purchased a large tract of land in Alabama, the cultivation of which he intends personally to superintend. English was one of the Democratic Congressmen who failed of re-election, but he is a born fighter, and is sure to be heard from two years hence.

One of the most delicate and intricate questions ever submitted for a legal opinion to the Department of Justice has been asked of Attorney-General Olney by the Treasury Department. It is whether stamp collectors have the right to print and sell fac-similes of the United States and foreign postage stamps. The business has attained considerable proportions, and with the increase of trade the stamps turned out have gradually reached a perfection in artistic finish and coloring that makes them hardly distinguishable from the genuine. The best engravers and printers are employed in this work, and while Chief Hazen of the secret service does not charge that any such stamps, either foreign or domestic, are used illegally, he contends that the possibilities for fraud on the revenue are startling. In unscrupulous hands such stamps and dies could be utilized for wholesale frauds. As to foreign stamps, the United States, by it treaties with the various powers, is committed to prevent the counterfeiting of obligations of foreign nations of any kind, and stamps by law are held to be obligations, so that the question assumes international importance. Philatelists contend that by printing fac-similes of stamps they are serving as educators of youth and prevent imposition. Until the question is decided by the Attorney-General, the Treasury Department will confine its efforts to securing possession of dangerous stamp dies, but will not undertake to confiscate the large stock of stamp albums in the hands of booksellers and others.

PRECAUTIONS NECESSARY.

Or Why Old Nick Had Burglar-Proof Locks Put On the Gates of Hades.

Hades was anxiously awaiting the return of its master. The fires were banked and trade was almost at a standstill owing to the agitation against admitting fire-worshippers. Mrs. Satan, who had been left in charge, had ruled the place with an iron hoof, and the assistant chief devils, their assistants and the multitude of minor devils were all on the point of mutiny. At last, when things were nearing a crisis Satan appeared, looking weary and dejected.

"Where have you been, dear?" anxiously asked Mrs. Satan.

"To New York," gasped Satan; and he passed his hands across his face as if to wipe away some horrible nightmare.

"That's where Dr. Parkhurst lives, isn't it?"

"Yes, and I'm really sorry for him, because—— Say, are the gates locked and barred?"

"Yes; why?"

"Get Lucifer to put a night chain and an extra padlock on, will you. And say, don't you dare let a New Yorker in here on any account. Do you hear?"

"Why not, pray? Are they not——"

"Why not?" asked Satan, and there was an anxious ring to his voice; "why not? Because they'd be corrupting our morals inside of a week."

And Mrs. Satan hurried to carry out her husband's instructions."—Judge.

SEVENTEEN INCHES TALL.

The Princess Paulina of Holland Comes Over to be Seen by Americans.

There arrived recently from Hamburg the Princess Paulina, 18 years of age and exactly 17 inches tall.

The Princess Paulina was born in Ossendrecht, Holland, and is the seventh child of a family of twelve children, her brothers and sisters being of the ordinary size. She weighs 8 1-2 pounds, and at her birth was 12 inches tall, just five inches less than her present height. She is accompanied by two sisters and a brother.

Besides her own native Dutch she speaks French and German, and is learning English. At a reception given her she pinned a flower on the lapel of each of her visitors. To enable the Princess to do this, the men took turns presenting themselves at the tall table upon which she was mounted. One late comer, however, failed to present himself, and, observing this, the Princess commanded that she be set upon the floor, when she offered the flower. For the man to descend to the level of her reach was a matter of sitting on the floor.

It is said that the Princess is to be married at the end of her present professional engagement.

Short Lessons in Natural History.

The preservation of the flesh of the mammoth for ages in Siberia is not remarkable. In most northern districts of that country ground never thaws beyond the depth of two or three feet. Bodies of men buried 200 years ago have recently been examined and found unchanged, being frozen perfectly solid.

Sea anemones and some other marine creatures of low degree increase their species by budding. A small knot or wart appears on the body of the animal, and by and by develops into a perfect, though minute, animal of the same species, separates from its parent and sets up in business for itself.

Animals are often able to bear very protracted fasting. In the Italian earthquakes of 1795 two hogs were buried at Soriano in the ruins of a building. They were taken out alive 42 days later, but very lean and weak. A dog at the same time and place, was buried for 23 days and recovered.

A country cat can always be kept at home by cutting off her ears, or for a time by clipping out the hairs in the interior. The long hairs serve to keep out the drops of dew that fall from the leaves of plants and grasses, and when the hairs are removed the cat will stay at home rather than claw the water out of her ears.

The teeth of rats are kept sharp by a very peculiar provision of nature. The outer edge of the incisors is covered with a layer of enamel as hard as flint, while the under side is much softer. The layer of enamel on the under side therefore wear away much faster than those on the upper surface, and a keen cutting edge is always presented.

The leaves of several plants often contract in a remarkable way to form lodging places for young insects to be hatched from eggs laid in the substance of the leaf. When an egg has been laid in a leaf of the chickweed it contracts into a globular form; the juniper leaf sends out a small globular body or excrescence, while the leaf of the poplar puts forth a juice that dries into a red globe.

A Tragic Complication.

"So you refuse me!" said Charley Callew, bitterly.

"Of course," said the charming widow.

"Won't you even be a sister to me?"

"No, I'm engaged to marry your father. I'll be a mother to you."—Washington (D. C.) Star.

A WONDERFUL WORK.

Something of the Utmost Interest.

A Matter Which Deeply Concerns Everybody.

It Means Less Expense and More Money.

It is Just What All Persons Are Looking For.

Probably the Greatest Discovery of the Age.

The greatest and most wonderful enterprises in the world are those which have the strongest and most powerful intellects back of them, which result from years of study by thinking men, and which are built upon a foundation so sure and firm that no possible emergency can weaken them. This is exactly the case with the subject in question. It has astonished the most learned men everywhere, and the greatest intellects of the age acknowledge its genuine worth and marvelous superiority. And what makes it still more valuable is the fact that it is something a large portion of the people need.

No other discovery in the world has proved so useful, has been the means of so much saving, and has so completely won the hearts of the people as Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy. Its irresistible power to cure has astonished the greatest physicians in the world. One great reason why this wonderful remedy has taken the highest place among all the medicines o the world, why people prefer it to all others, and have more confidence in it than any other, is that Dr. Greene, himself, personally assumes the entire responsibility of his medicine.

There are many remedies of uncertain value with no one to vouch for them, no physician standing behind them with whom persons can consult in case the medicines fail to produce the desired effect. But here is one which is the discovery and prescription of the best known and most successful specialist in curing nervous and chronic diseases, Dr. Greene, of 35 West 14th St., New York City, who is in active practice, and stands ready at all times to answer any and all questions regarding his remedy and its effect. And right here is another great advantage. Dr. Greene actually requests all persons taking his wonderful remedy to consider themselves under his direct personal care and treatment, and to consult him, free of charge, personally or by letter. He will carefully answer all letters, giving his advice and all necessary information.

The great and world-wide reputation of Dr. Greene is a guarantee that his medicine will cure, and the fact that he can be consulted by anyone at any time, free of charge, gives absolute assurance of the sure and beneficial action of his valuable remedy. No other medicine in the world offers so many or such strong inducements, and no other can give such certain and powerful assurance of curing disease. These facts give everybody the utmost confidence in Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy. Use it It will make you strong and well.

is a virtuous vice. The world is better for it. It makes men ambitious—and it makes women careful of their personal appearance. It doesn't take much money to keep well-dressed now-a-days. Cleaning or dyeing makes it possible to use soiled or faded garments. And there's where our ax comes in. We are in the Cleaning and Dyeing business. Our cleaner is ready, and our dyer has his fall shades mixed.

FOR PLAINFIELD'S PROGRESS.

Washington's Bold March on Princeton.

Jan. 3, 1777, eight days after his boat expedition across the Delaware and surprise of the Hessians at Trenton, Washington dealt the British a second blow by stealing a march past the cantonments of Cornwallis' army around Trenton and striking Princeton. Cornwallis had directed his scattered detachments to march upon Trenton after the disaster to the Hessians, and they united in front of the American camp on Jan. 2 prepared to give battle. Finding his position extremely critical, Washington decided to withdraw and march around Cornwallis. In order to deceive the latter, the Americans lit their fires as usual and set patrols, who remained on duty until nearly daylight, then hastened to join the main body, already well on the way to its destination.

The distance of ten miles was covered in the night. Just before reaching Princeton the American commander detached General Hugh Mercer, with 350 Philadelphia militiamen, to seize a bridge at Worth's Mill, on Stony creek, and thus cut the communication between the British detachment at Princeton and their main army at Trenton. Mercer encountered the Seventeenth British regiment near the bridge and opened the attack with a deadly volley of musketry fired from behind a hedge. The British met the volley by a bayonet charge, and the militiamen, armed only with rifles, couldn't withstand the cold steel. After firing the third volley they broke and retreated toward Princeton. Mercer lost his life in trying to inspire his men to hold their ground. After receiving a blow from the butt end of a musket in the hands of a British soldier, which felled him, he half arose and fought with his sword until overcome with mortal bayonet wounds.

GENERAL MERCER.

Washington with two regiments of his regulars repulsed the British.

GEORGE L. KILMER.

E. C. Stahl, President of the New Jersey Editorial Association, has been induced by friends to allow his name to be used in connection with the commandership of the Department of New Jersey, G. A. R., the election for which will take place at the annual meeting of the Department in Trenton, February 7. He has been an active member in the G. A. R. for the last twenty-two years, and his aspirations for this high office are based solely on his services in the field and in the order. He deserves winning votes.

The municipal matter most talked of in Plainfield today is the report of the councilmanic committee on the water supply, published exclusively in The Daily Press of last Saturday. That portion which speaks so broadly of the danger of contamination is severely criticized. The committee is blamed by many for going so broadly into the details of that portion of their investigations. And there are those who hold that the committee are inconsistent. These point out that a short time ago the Councilmen were arguing (for the sake of getting the people reconciled to the filtration idea for sewage disposal) that sewage became by filtration a harmless and palatable liquid, whereas now they hold that the water supply, procured from deep wells whose source they say is Springfield, is endangered by the surface, cesspool and cemetery germs, in spite of the filteration through the earth. Regarding the claim that the company has no right to divert the Plainfield water to other places, the query is now put if Springfield cannot step forward and object to Plainfield's pumping away for her own sole use the water that the committee acknowledges comes from Springfield. These and many other arguments and criticisms are being discussed by the householders who have found no fault with the Water Supply Company for supplying Plainfield with the cheapest public water service in the country, and who object to having the world told what they do not believe, that the water they are drinking from the Plainfield mains is likely to become unfit for use just because other towns than Plainfield are drawing from the wells and opening up underground channels for the freer passage of the "subterranean river" which we have been boasting could supply all New York. The people do not take kindly to this shattering of their aqueous idol.

The gratification of accomplishing important progress for its town is the continual happy portion of The Daily Press, and it is with satisfaction that this the people's paper views the prospect for trolley railroad extension in the early Spring. Through all the past year The Press has been untiring in its agitation of this great public improvement, and the trolley warfare it has maintained has been effective. While such public-spirited men as ex-Councilman Spangenberg have been abroad looking up capital to invest in the road and in Plainfield, The Daily Press has been developing local patriotism here at home, and by its articles and arguments and urgings has fostered the growth of the enterprise. It has been no easy matter to overcome prejudice and bring heedless property-holders to understand the merits of the trolley in town-building, and the task of The Press has required courageous and patient persistence. The entire people have at last been brought to realize that unless Plainfield speedily provides popular rapid transit throughout its parts she will fall behind in the suburban competition for home-seekers from the metropolis. And, while this has been accomplishing at home, and the landowners have been shown that they must welcome and help the trolley extension project if they want their property developed and increased in value, Mr. Spangenberg has been negotiating with trolley builders and has found a capitalist who is ready to begin and push the work as soon as the town fathers say the word. The fact of his securing a desirable party for the work has already been recorded in this paper. Mr. Spangenberg first sought to get the Plainfield company to make the extensions, but says that their apathy forced him to the conclusion that they did not mean business, and he was obliged for the town's best interests to look elsewhere. When he announced in The Press that his search for a town-builder had been successful, and that the Mayor and Council were considering the plans of the capitalist whom he had procured, he found the Plainfield company developing unwonted activity, and, as he expressed it, now that others were after the franchise the Plainfield company were getting anxious. The Council will of course receive all applications that may come before it, and the people trust them to grant the franchise to the applicant whose pledges are most advantageous to Plainfield's interests. The capitalist who has been interested by Mr. Spangenberg wants only one concession, and that is that he be given the exclusive franchise for a term of years. This he insists on because he purposes to invest heavily in Plainfield, and too brief a contract, or competition, would prevent him from getting adequate return for his money. The entire matter is now under careful consideration by the Councilmen, and early in the year action will be taken. Meanwhile, agents are active in applying for rights of way, and the Plainfield company claims to have secured all that are necessary. Plainfield's four corners should most certainly be provided for by local trolley banches before the New York and Philadelphia Traction Company acquire a thoroughfare through the place. Plainfield must give its present population a cheap and pleasant medium for getting about before she can hope to acquire much greater growth.

FAIREST OF THE FAIR.

A Brilliant Gathering Does Honor to the Mayor's Wife.

The beautiful mansion of Mayor Gilbert was once more transformed to a bower of beauty yesterday afternoon, the occasion being the last of the delightful series of receptions and "at homes" given by the the popular hostesses, Mrs. Gilbert and her sister, Miss Alice Randolph.

The large reception hall drawing room, parlors and banquet room were a perfect vision of pink—indeed, so beautiful was the rare profusion of pink pinks and pink roses massed in enormous vases, banked in convenient corners or clustered with graceful effect on mantelpiece and table, and all enhanced by the genial presence of the artistically gowned hostesses and her guests that it would be difficult to imagine a more beautiful picture set in a fairer frame.

The guests who assembled to honor Mrs. Gilbert and Miss Randolph numbered over two hundred and fifty and the happy party of friends—for such in truth it was—did not fail to express to their entertainers the unbounded pleasure afforded them in being present.

Mrs. Walter Stewart assisted in receiving, and presiding at the samovars of tea and chocolate were Mrs. Fredrick G Mead, Mrs. A. C. Baldwin, Mrs. Daniel F. Ginna and Mrs. B. Arrowsmith Hegeman. Flitting in and out among the guests were Miss Bessie Ginna, Miss Grace Cooley, Miss Sadie VanBoskerck and Miss Marion Dumont, four beautiful young women, who gracefully assisted in making light the pleasant duties of the artists at the table. A more successful function could not have been given than this last "at home". An unusually large number of men did honor to the occasion, and the affair will be long and pleasantly treasured in the memory of all who participated.

Union Village Donation.

The annual donation of the Union Village Methodist Church will be held at the residence of Israel J. Coon Wednesday evening, Jan. 9. Those who were at Mr. Coon's at the great Harvest Home last year will be glad to enjoy another pleasant occasion. There will be vocal and instrumental music and also other entertainment. An excellent supper will be served. The Plainfield Quartette will be present and render vocal selections.

$100 Reward $100.

The reader of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly on the blood and mucous surface of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer $100 for any case that it fails to cure.

Serious Driving Accident.

George Harrison, a helper employed by Carl Kaerth, narrowly escaped serious injuries on being thrown from a heavily loaded sled at the corner of Watchung avenue and Second street this noon. Even yet his condition is critical. The sled, with Kaerth and young Harrison on the seat, was overturned by the runner being caught in the gutter and the boy was thrown with great force to the ground, striking his head and badly bruising his hand.

Mr. Kaerth had all he could do to gain control of the team, and Messrs. VanEmburgh and Harper, who were passing at the time, kindly picked up the unconscious young man and carried him to Kaerth's house, where he was found to be suffering from bruises about the head and shoulders as well as the lacerated hand already mentioned.

At the time of going to press he was resting quietly and it is hoped will soon recover. About fifteen dozen bottles of "soft stuff" was spilled in the gutters.

HIGH SCHOOL NOTEBOOK.

The regular Thursday morning singing lesson of the Grammar school was held as usual this morning.

The Senior class have taken up a new kind of work. Various important enterprises going on in the world are discussed, after which each member of the class writes a short essay on the subject. The power plant now being constructed at Niagara Falls is the subject before the class at present.

The joint committee to select school colors and a school yell will meet tomorrow at recess to decide on the colors. Red and white, red and gray, and red and dark blue seem to be the most popular among the pupils.

The report cards for the last two months were distributed at the close of school. NINETY-FIVE

DRAMA AND OPERA.

FANNY DAVENPORT AND HER NEW FRENCH PLAY DRAW WELL.

Damrosch Preparing for His Season of German Opera to be Given in February.

The Bostonians Revive Prince Ananias.

Jessie Bartlett Davis Appears as a Boy.

If Fanny Davenport were to suddenly lose her ability as an actress there is probably not a theatre owner in New York city who would not be glad to secure her services as a stage manager. Whenever you see Miss Davenport in a play you may be sure there is not an action or gesture in it that she is not personally responsible for. You see one of the supers looking attentively at the toe of his sandal. Miss Davenport has directed him to do it. A small Grecian ingenue turns up her nose at nothing in particular. Miss Davenport has taught her the trick. In the words of an irreverent actor, "She is a wonder."

MISS DAVENPORT.

No more beautiful series of living pictures has ever been seen on the New York boards than that which "Gismonda" presents at the Fifth Avenue Theatre. The scenery is truly superb and the costumes gorgeous. Sardou's drama is a fine piece of workmanship, and the title role is splendidly fitted to Fanny Davenport's heroic and emotional methods. The large company engaged in the cast is entirely competent. The piece is as Frenchy as the French.

Walter Damrosch has received from Vienna the scene models to be used during his season of German opera, which will commence in February at the Metropolitan Opera House. The success of the season is now assured, the subscriptions, which closed on December 29, having been exceedingly liberal. The public this winter has manifested an interest in opera which has never been equalled in this city, and there is little likelihood that it will be exhausted before the German season commences. It is a curious fact that a Wagner opera should prove one of the great paying performances of the season, but "Lohengrin" has evidently taken this winter the place in popular interest occupied by "Carmen" last year. The most brilliant performance this season had Mme. Melba as Elsa. Her presence in the cast, together with the peculiarity of Jean de Reszke, served to fill the house at a time when the theatres are only slimly attended. She wore in the second act a crown and costume similar to those imported by Mme. Nordica from Bayreuth, and sang the music of Elsa as it has never been sung on the stage of the Metropolitan Opera House by any one but her. Mr. Damrosch is to make a feature of "Lohengrin" in his season, and the opera will be the next to follow "Tristan and Isolde," with which the series of Wagner operas will begin.

The extent to which realism in being introduced in living pictures may be judged by the fact that at Koster & Bial's music hall actual smoke does artistic duty in "The Last Stand," a picture by Frederick Remington, representing an incident in Custer's last battle by living pictures. Just before the curtain is drawn a volley of musketry is fired and the figures are thus seen partly hidden in a cloud of smoke. The effect, as may be imagined, is marvelously realistic.

The new version of "Prince Ananias" has been given by the Bostonians. The most important change was the appearance of Jessie Bartlett Davis as a boy. The comedy scenes in which the strolling players figure have also been written up, and in the second act Mr. Victor Herbert has added several new numbers to his attractive score.

The last and smallest midget to arrive in this country recently gave a reception at the Fifth Avenue Hotel. The Princess Paulina was carried into the drawing room in a basket of flowers. The basket was carried by her sister, a plump young person five feet seven inches. Next to her height, which is only 18 inches, the most remarkable thing about this most remarkable little woman is her strength. When she shook hands with her guest it was noticed that her tiny hand was as hard as iron. Her handshake was almost a clinch. Five minutes later a number of dumb bells were brought in. The biggest one weighed 18 pounds, just double her own weight, and Paulina raised it three times above her head. She then stood on a table three times her own height and jumped to the floor.

It has come at last. Ever since the first success of the novel this calamity has been prophesied. "Trilby" is to be dramatized. The Harpers have sold the stage rights of the novel to Manager A. M. Palmer and Paul M. Potter has been engaged to do the dramatization. There is no doubt that Mr. Potter will do his part skilfully and that Mr. Palmer will give the play an appropriate setting, but the experiment is at best a doubtful one. One might almost as well try to dramatize one of Thackeray's novels.

The Kind of Client to Have.

"My client Barker is the kind of man I admire," said Brief. "He told me he was willing to spend ten thousand dollars to recover one hundred dollars he had been defrauded of."

"What advice did you give him."

"I told him to go ahead—that I was with him in all matters involving a principle of that sort."

The Young Men Made the Supper.

A reception was given in Monroe Avenue Chapel last night to the young women of Miss Beekman's and Mr. McGee's classes. The chapel was the scene of a merry assembly, and was decorated in an artistic manner. As soon as the young people arrived, games were indulged in. At 8:30 the programme of the evening which was arranged by Charles Hayes, was begun. The first on the programme was a dialogue, entitled "Swinging on the Gate", which was a great success. Those who took part were: Messrs. E. Cook, F. Fulton, S. E. Beekman, F. Batson, and C. Bluard. The audience was treated next by Messrs. C. Hayes and W. Littell, who played several selections on the banjo and guitar. Singing was indulged in, and, about 10, all partook of a repast, prepared by the young men, of cake, fruits, chocolate, lemonade and charlotte russe. After playing games, all were taken home by Capt. Hand, who had been engaged to deport them. All the girls said that the spread was the best that was ever in the chapel. Those who were there were: Misses G Beekman, L Aldrich, R Adams, K Ackerman, M Beekman, S Rudd, the Misses King, B La Rue, and K Apgar, Mr Newman, and Messrs E Cook, C Hayes, W Littell, F Fulton, S Beekman, F E Batson, F E Philips, C Bluard, and Mr Hummer.

Jingle Bells.

Westfield and then Rahway was the destination of a sleighing party composed of a number of Plainfield's young people who enjoyed last evening's delightful sleighing. Miss Grace Irwin was chaperone. After a delightful evening the following party returned:

Misses Edith Huribut, Lilla Livezay, Clara Williams, Stella Shotwell; and Messrs. Sydney R. Titsworth, Arthur W. Vail, E. F. Vail, J. V. Rittenhouse, Volney F. Green and Roland Tomlinson.

Marvelous Results.

From a letter written by Rev. J. Gunderman, of Diamondale, Mich., we are permitted to make this extract: 'I have no hesitation in recommending Dr. King's New Discovery, as the results were almost marvelous in the case of my wife. While I was pastor of the Baptist Church at Rives Junction she was brought down by pneumonia succeeding la grippe. Terrible paroxysms of coughing would last hours with little interruption and it seemed as if she could not survive them. A friend recommended Dr. King's New Discovery; it was quick in its work and highly satisfactory in results. Sold by L. W. Randolph druggist. Regular size 50c and $1; our price 45c and 90c

She Was Curious.

Young Queen Wilhelmina of the Netherlands and the queen regent were on a special train between Munich and Wuerzburg recently. Suddenly the signal for the emergency brake was pulled and the train halted abruptly. The guards and chief engineer hurried in alarm from carriage to carriage, asking members of the suite what the trouble was. Nobody could say. The chief engineer then approached the royal saloon. The young queen leaned out of the window, and, with the blush of guilt all over her face, exclaimed: "Don't you come here; I didn't do it!" The young woman had pulled the signal merely to see what would happen.—San Francisco Argonaut.

AN ALMOST MIRACULOUS CURE.

The Statement of Mr. Edward Teel, Jr., of Dunellen, N. J.

TO THE PUBLIC:

From a sense of duty I desire to call public attention to the almost miraculous cure which Dr. Lighthill effected in the case of my wife. For eleven years she had been afflicted with piles of an unusual severe and distressing character. She suffered every day of her life the most intense pain, attended with frequent and profuse hemorrhage. This state of things debilitated her entire system until she became a perfect wreck of her former self.

We made every effort to obtain a cure but they all resulted in bitter disappointment, although a number of physicians of excellent reputations for skill in that direction had treated her case. She grew worse and worse all the time, the pain became perfectly unbearable and I felt she could not bear the strain of her condition much longer. In this extremity, a friend of mine, Mr. W. E. Dilts, a resident of Roselle, N. J., a passenger conductor on the New Jersey Central told me that he had been similarly affected, and had been permanently cured by Dr. Lighthill, after other medical skill had failed. He assured me that the doctor would cure my wife, no matter how severe her case may be, and his prediction proved perfectly correct. In spite of her desperate condition, Dr. Lighthill, I am glad to say, has effected a complete and perfect cure in her case, and has given her new life.

Since the cure has been effected she has gained in health and strength and is so improved in appearance that her friends scarcely recognize her. They all consider her cure as almost miraculous, and Dr. Lighthill's praise is heard on every side. Our gratitude to Dr. Lighthill is unbounded and we only hope that other sufferers may be benefited by this publication.

A Flattering Testimonial from Colonel John Dietrich, One of Plainfield's Oldest and Best Known Residents.

16 ARLINGTON PLACE,
Plainfield, N. J., July 17, 1894.

I am profoundly grateful to Dr. Lighthill for his speedy and radical cure of a most painful malady of over ten years standing with which I was afflicted.

I deem it proper to say to all afflicted to place themselves under the care of this skilful physician and be permanently cured.

I will cheerfully impart any information I possess when called upon.

Mr. Thomas Callahan of No. 214 Richmond street Cured of a Very Distressing Trouble by Dr. Lighthill.

PLAINFIELD, N. J., June 1, 1894.

TO THE PUBLIC:

For some time past I have been greatly distressed with noises in the head. They were all over my head and troubled me constantly; they were loudest at night when everything was quiet and at such times would often keep me from sleep and disturb my rest. In fact they got to be so bad and distressing that they affected my whole nervous system as well as my health. I did not obtain the least relief until I placed myself under the care of Dr. Lighthill, of No. 132 Crescent avenue, who effected a complete cure in my case in a short time and made me a very happy man.

A Card From Mr. T. R VanZandt,

of Nos. 304 and 306 Park ave.,

Plainfield, N. J.

I certify with pleasure that Dr. Lighthill has effectually cured me of a most painful case of piles. For some time past I had been subject to its attacks, but the last attack was so exceedingly painful that it completely upset my whole system. The pain extended to my legs and in many other directions, and made me so nervous that I could neither sleep, sit down, lie down or move about without serious discomfort and distress. Such was my condition when I applied to Dr. Lighthill for relief, and I am glad to say that as soon as he took hold of my case, I began to improve, and in a short time found myself completely cured. Dr. Lighthill has also effected a radical and permanent cure in a most terrible case of piles on my cousin, Mr. J. V. Z. Griggs, of Rocky Hill, N. J., whose flattering testimonial is in Dr. Lighthill's possession.

Rough, painful, perhaps bleeding hands are bad enough, but what annoys you most is the untidy looks which scrubbing seems only to make worse and which nothing but warm weather will quite remedy. GOV. MORTON'S VIEWS

His First Message to New York's Legislature.

Comments on the Amendment Affecting Race Track Betting—Suggestion That Convicts Be Employed in Making Roads—Greater New York Commission.

Albany, Jan. 3.—In submitting his first annual message to the legislature Gov. Morton confessed great diffidence at addressing legislators who have a wider knowledge than he regarding the affairs of New York. Becoming more encouraged, he makes a swing at the prophetic and predicts a year of prosperity. In this financial mood, he offers as a pointer to the lawmakers a suggestion that a law be enacted to fix the tax levy earlier in the year in order that appropriations can be met when due.

With an eye to economy, Mr. Morton asks for the wiping out of multifarious "commissions" paid to individuals by the state departments. About a million and a quarter dollars leaked out of the treasury last year in the shape of "commissions."

Coming to the constitutional amendments, the governor makes this comment regarding the racing law:

"The penal code of this state contains numerous and apparently sufficient provisions against gambling. Among these provisions, section 351 makes poolselling and bookmaking upon races criminal offenses. By chapter 479 of the laws of 1887 (commonly known as the Ives pool bill), the legislature exempted from the operation of the above-mentioned section the race tracks and grounds of incorporated racing associations during thirty days of each year, and thus permitted, upon those tracks and grounds alone, the acts which remain criminal in all other parts of the state.

"The revised constitution, section 9 of article 1, adds to the old provision against lotteries a provision that neither poolselling, bookmaking, nor any other kind of gambling, shall hereafter be authorized or allowed within this state, and requires the legislature to pass appropriate laws to prevent offenses against any of the provisions of the section. It is well understood that this provision is aimed at the race track gambling permitted by the statute of 1887, above mentioned, and the legislature, in obedience to the will of the people thus expressed, should, without delay, expunge the obnoxious law from the statute books."

The message calls on the legislature to provide in some way for employment of convicts, since the new constitution prohibits their making goods in competition with other labor. The governor says:

"If their services can be legally applied to the building and improvement of roads and highways, the manufacture of clothing and other articles, the raising of food supplies on state farms, and other like pursuits, all for use in state institutions, the solution of the problem may be less difficult than it now appears to be."

Respecting that subject now uppermost in the minds of the people of New York city, the power of removal bill, Gov. Morton confidently asserts that it is demanded by a large part of the people.

Mentioning the popular vote in favor of consolidating New York, Brooklyn and adjacent cities, the governor advocates the creation of a commission composed of citizens from the places interested to frame a charter and present it to the legislature.

Speaking of election reforms, the message favors the blanket ballot.

Canal improvements are especially dwelt upon by the governor. He asks for prompt appropriations to strengthen the state canals against the competition of Canadian waterways. Likewise, an appeal is made for better roads.

In regard to the amended civil service laws, Mr. Morton says it may be well considered whether the "prudent and consistent extension and perfection" of the civil service requirements will not be beneficial.

Touching on banking, a subject with which Mr. Morton is more familiar than gubernational duties, he promulgates the view that the whole capital stock of a new bank should be paid in before it is authorized to commence business, instead of the half payments as at present. He further recommends that bankers should not be allowed to loan the bank's money to themselves, but be required to apply to the directors in the regular way.

Congratulation is offered that New York leads in educational affairs, and the legislature is advised to open the state purse "liberally, but with economic discretion" in school appropriations.

Revision of insurance laws is called for. In commenting on the dependent insane, the transfer by New York and Kings counties of their insane to the care of the state, is regarded as just and humane.

"The national guard of New York is conceded to be second to none," the message states, "and it must not be allowed to deteriorate." Then Mr. Morton hints at "inferior weapons" now in use and recommends arms of modern pattern.

Ice Boats on the Shrewsbury.

Red Bank, N. J., Jan. 3.—In the ice boat race on the North Shrewsbury Gus Haviland's Nancy Hanks won the pennant in the third class. Captain Weaver's Kittie, which was formerly the old Scud, won in the second class. If the weather permits there will be another pennant race to-day.

The Young Czar Liberal.

London, Jan. 3.—A dispatch from Moscow states that the czar in revising the list of officers for promotion, which list gives the age, religion, etc., of the officers, struck his pen through the column marked "religion," declaring that that was a question that did not concern him.

Dropped Dead in the Station.

Bryn Mawr, Pa., Jan. 3.—Dr. James Rhoades, ex-president of the Bryn Mawr college for women, dropped dead in the railroad station here. Dr. Rhoades was 70 years of age.

WEAVERS' WAGES TO ADVANCE.

Scarcity of Operatives Cause Owners To Make This Move.

New Bedford, Mass., Jan. 3.—There is a great scarcity of weavers in the mills in this city and two mills have advanced wages to try to induce weavers to come here, and it is currently reported that other mills will follow the example set by the Acushnet and Hathaway mills.

The cause of this scarcity of mill operatives is dated back to the recent big strike. During the strike hundreds of families left town and many of these were natives of Canada and England. These operatives left for their homes and it is estimated that about 1,000 weavers left during the long strike. Many found work at home and others settled in other mill centres.

When the big strike was settled wages were reduced and very few weavers came back to the city as they were making more money where they had settled. Many had expended all the money they had in getting out of town and could not afford to move back.

Agents of various mills have been scouring all mill centres for weavers, but as the wages here were known to have been reduced and not raised after the settlement of the strike, hardly any weavers could be induced to move to this city and thus ever since the big strike, the weave shops of most of the mills have been more or less hampered. A leader in the weaver's union said that the only way to remedy the evil was to raise wages, and that it would not surprise him very much to hear of a general advancement in weavers' wages very soon.

FATHER STICK'S HARSH WORDS.

Wished His Parishioners Would Get Drunk and Freeze.

Pana, Ill., Jan. 3.—Rev. Father Stick, who last summer gained notoriety by publicly assailing Protestants, said to his parishioners: "I have members who will not rent pews because they are too poor, yet they have money to get drunk twice a month. I wish they would get drunk to-night and lay out doors and freeze to death.

"There are members of my congregation who allow their daughters to go to high-toned balls and dance in full dress—no dress at all. Only indecent Catholics, Protestants and heretics go to such places."

He said in plainer words that he wished from the bottom of his heart the girls who went to these dances would be ruined, and added: "I wish every boy or young man who attends these dances would become diseased and rot, and then the generation would soon be exterminated."

TROUBLES IN ARMENIA.

The Natives Are Desperate and Almost Ready for Any Violence.

London, Jan. 3.—The Morning Post hears from Vienna that Tahsin, governor of Bitlis, has been assassinated by an Armenian, who committed suicide before he could be arrested.

Letters from Armenia say that the Armenians are desperate and ready for any violence. It is said that the governor of Ezin recently summoned conspicuous Armenians to warn them of a threatened Kurdish attack and to advise them that they must prepare to defend themselves, as he could do little for them.

The Armenians tried to obtain arms, as he advised, but found great difficulty in getting them. The attack was made; the result is not known.

Turkish officials are said to be confiscating letters right and left; hence, it is hardly possible to get unbiased accounts of events in Asia Minor.

JERSEY CITY BANK ROBBED.

The Sum of $2,200 Was Mysteriously Stolen Last September.

Jersey City, Jan. 3.—It was reported recently that $2,200 had disappeared from the Hudson County bank of this city. When a rumor of the loss was started, the bank officials denied it, but Cashier J. Warren Hardenbergh has admitted that $2,200 has been stolen. He said:

"My opinion is that the money was stolen by an outsider. It disappeared in September last. I was away at the time. It is possible that the thief sneaked through my office. Another theory is that the thief hauled the money over the counter by means of a hook which he could have thrust between the gratings when the teller was not looking.

"I do not suspect any of the bank officials or accountants."

Requisition for Holmes.

Philadelphia, Jan. 3.—Superintendent of Police Lindon has received a dispatch from the sheriff of Fort Worth, Tex., announcing that a requisition had been mailed for the return to that place of H. H. Holmes, the alleged insurance swindler. This was done so that in case Holmes should not be convicted here Fort Worth will have the first claim on him.

Work on the Delavan Ruins.

Albany, Jan. 3.—Workmen have begun to tear down the great walls of the Delavan ruins preparatory to beginning a search for the bodies of the 15 hotel employes who perished. It will be two or three days before the search of the ruins can be attempted, as the walls cannot be lowered before that time.

Captain Dixon Rewarded.

Gloucester, Mass., Jan. 3.—Captain Dixon, of the schooner Rigel, on returning from a fishing trip, found four checks amounting to $650 for the rescue of the people of the steamer Mirauda in Greenland. Captain Dixon has already received $525 toward the $4,000 salvage fund promised.

Carter Will Plead Guilty.

New York, Jan. 3.—Edward R. Carter, charged with embezzling $30,000 from the National Bank of Commerce, will plead guilty to-day to the charge against him before United States Commissioner Shields.

Has Appointed a Receiver.

DON CAMERON IS ANGRY

Objects to a Theatre Next to His Mansion.

The Sale of the Historic House Where Blaine Lived and Died to a Chicago Syndicate May Lead to an Estrangement Between the Blaine and Cameron Families.

Washington, Jan. 3.—It is possible that the sale of the historic house in which James G. Blaine lived and died may lead to a permanent estrangement between two families which have long been prominent and powerful in public affairs and the members of which are related by blood, in addition to being on terms of the most intimate friendship. A feud between the clan Cameron and the house of Blaine is threatened. The Chicago capitalist who bought the house from Mrs. Blaine immediately got out a permit for the erection of a $250,000 opera house, which it is announced is to be finished by the middle of September next. Adjoining the Blaine house on the south side is a vacant lot belonging to the government, which, it is thought, will eventually be utilized as a site for a new building for the department of justice, now located in a building on one-half of the lot.

Next to the Blaine house on the north side lives Senator Don Cameron of Pennsylvania, in the aristocratic old mansion known as the Ogle Taylor house, which was the scene of the most brilliant entertainments in the years before, during, and just after the close of the war.

Last summer this house was remodelled by the Camerons at an expense of about $30,000, and it was intended by the senator and his family to make it their permanent Washington home.

Senator Cameron has built and owns other houses in a more fashionable part of the city, but preferred to live in this aristocratic, time-mellowed old house, with its historic associations, in spite of the fact that the immediate neighborhood is being rapidly given up to hotels, boarding houses, clubs, and shops.

A year or two ago Mr. John McLean, who owns nearly all the adjoining square in which the Cameron house is located, thought of erecting a theatre building on one portion of it, but it is said was persuaded from doing so by Senator Cameron and other wealthy residents of the neighborhood. The senator is now reported to be exceedingly indignant that the Blaine property, immediately adjoining his, should have been disposed of to a Chicago syndicate for the purpose of erecting a large theatre, on the top of which is to be a roof garden, with all its accompanying attractions.

On the fence surrounding the Blaine house the enterprising Chicagoans have already hung a large colored picture showing the new theatre as it is to be, and have been obliged to employ watchmen during the past day or two to keep the great crowd of curiosity seekers outside of the house, so that the work of destruction commenced last Saturday can go on.

It is not known whether Mrs. Blaine was aware of Senator Cameron's objection to having a roof garden theatre next door to him, the top of which overlook his beautiful garden, surrounded with a high brick wall, intended to exclude the gaze of the public, or whether she knew and did not care. It is certain, however, that she has closed the bargain, received the purchase price, and moved to Dupont circle, in the great pile of brick which Mr. Blaine erected after being selected as Garfield's secretary of state and where he would have entertained the Washington world for four years had not Guiteau's bullet prevented.

The proprietors of the existing theatres in Washington laugh at the announcement that the Chicago purchasers of the Blaine house propose to build a theatre upon its site, and emphatically declare that they intend to do nothing of the kind. These men say that as the entire width of the lot is only sixty feet it is an impossibility to get the stage room for a theatre, and that therefore the hasty announcement is simply a trick to deceive the public.

Charges Against Collector Houck.

Rochester, N. Y., Jan. 3.—It has been known here for a long time that charges had been preferred against Collector Houck of the port of Genesee. The charges relate to misconduct and allege inefficiency. They are understood to eminate from certain Cleveland democrats, who were displeased because Houck began to train with the Hill men as soon as he was nominated.

Collision of Street Cars.

Indianapolis, Jan. 3.—About twenty persons were more or less severely injured by the collision of two street cars here. William Kurman had several ribs broken and John Miller may lose his nose.

AMERICA AS IT IS.

A FRENCH WOMAN GIVES HER QUEER IMPRESSIONS.

Chicago Horses Wear Trousers and Ladies Chew Tobacco. Every Boy Lays the Foundation for the Presidency by Going Barefoot and Selling Papers.

And now a French woman has been over to America and has written a book about us! It is Mme. Louis Grandin, a Parisian journaliste of local fame in the gay French capital.

She writes:

Chicago!!

My first view of State street stupefied me. It gave me an idea of the immense scale on which Chicago is built.

It would be hard to get any exact idea of the originality of height of the buildings. It is the delirium of archictecture. No two structures resemble each other; it is a nameless mixture of all styles and all epochs.

New York is a pigmy compared to Chicago. The Masonic Temple on State street is twenty stories high, and all the other buildings vary from seventeen to twenty stories high.

By the advice of our friends I had engaged rooms in the house of an "honorable" American family, and I at once began to search for my new home.

I inquired the way of a policeman, a kind of Hercules, whose comic uniform would certainly be most successful in an opera bouffe.

Although not having the distinction of our French policeman, this worthy Chicago officer was infinitely more polite than our own guardians of the peace. Drawing the city directory from his pocket, he at once told us that the house I was looking for was situated in the south of the city.

It is an American habit to speak of the cardinal points when indicating any street or house.

I finally arrived. It was No. 3,700.

The landlady came toward me very graciously. Her name was Miss Flack. She had the figure of a young girl, but, good heavens! what a face! She looked fifty years old, with angular and ill natured features, lit up by two terrible coal black eyes. On her head was a mossy and whitish looking bang.

In a shrill and soured voice, perfectly in keeping with her physiognomy, Miss Flack began by assuring us that she had nobody in the house but persons of the highest respectability.

The place had been recommended to me as a private family, but it was evidently only an ordinary boarding house.

I asked Miss Flack if I could have some lunch, at which she looked surprised, saying that lunch hour was passed and that she expected her boarders to conform to the custom of the house. Finally, however, she condescended to get to me something to eat.

When I went to bed that night I put my boots outside the door, expecting to find them blacked the next morning. I found they hadn't been touched. Thinking they had been forgotten, I rang the bell. A servant came up and I pointed to the shoes. The girl picked them up and stood there, as if not knowing what to do. In pantomime I showed her. She mockingly opened her eyes as if scandalized, let the shoes drop and went down stairs furious.

A few minutes later Miss Flack informed me that in America servants don't blacken shoes.

She said she was sorry for the incident—not on my account, but on her girl's, who was very much vexed, and who would probably leave her.

I really thought she was going to ask me to apologize.

For a long time I had noticed in every drawing room the presence of a little porcelain vase, more or less decorated, the use of which I couldn't guess. I had certainly remarked with disgust on the street and on the tramways the men chewing that something which is so dear to our sailors and their continually spitting. But I supposed they belonged to the lower classes of society, and I regretted that people of bad breeding were so numerous. One day, however, I saw in a drawing room a gentleman of irreproachable respectability put into his mouth a plug of tobacco.

The tobacco chewing vice is general and has invaded all classes. Even the women chew all day a kind or gum with an insupportable odor.

Some American ladies are not even content with gum; they chew tobacco.

Still this is not as funny as the Chicago horses, who wear immense straw hats. Inside these hats, as in the men's silk hats, are placed wet sponges, which keep off the sunstroke. The gentlemen often replace the sponge in their hats by a cabbage leaf.

All the Chicago horses wear these straw hats, but some of the horses wear more than that even. I saw several horses on State street wearing trousers made of blue jeans. The neck and back were covered with oil cloth, and the poor beast's head was adorned with an immense Panama hat. It looked so funny that I became almost hysterical with laughter, to the great surprise of my friends, who saw nothing unusual in it.

Americans never forbid their children to do anything. They don't think they have the right. In many ways, I think, children are brought up better in America than they are in France. They are taught very early to rely upon themselves, and it is no unusual sight to see young children of very tender age alone in the street without being watched. The street seems to be their great playground, in which they all play, without distinction of class. And this mixing with other children, far from injuring them seems to do them good.

Every American boy has two great ambitions, the hope of becoming one day president of the Republic and of amassing a great fortune.

When an American boy is supposed by his parents to have attained the age of reason he receives a monthly allowance. This is supposed to teach him how to administrate his estate when he comes of age, and also to teach him to be economical. One very frequently meets in the streets of New York and Chicago young men of good family walking with bare feet and carring their shoes in their hands in order not to wear out their shoes. I have also seen boys of rich families selling newspapers in the streets.

The American army is not a large one, but its officers wear brilliant uniforms. One day at the exposition I passed a group of four generals in full dress uniform. They looked very fine, with their feathers, cocked hats and breasts covered with decorations. They were talking with great animation, and I stopped a moment to look at them, my attention being particularly attracted to a tall, handsome man with a distinguished face. Suddenly the object of my admiration turned around, just facing me, and, putting his two fingers to his nose, and with a gesture I shall never forget, he removed by rapid ejaculation the surplus of mucus that was probably troubling him. I was rooted to the spot and almost stifled with indignation. Such a beautiful general!

I don't think much of the American firemen. They chiefly run to girth, so it is hardly surprising that they can't run up a ladder to save life with the same agility and courage as our French firemen. In fact, they rarely go on the roof of a burning building, but confine themselves to working the pumps and blowing up the surrounding houses by dynamite.

The frequency of fires in America is probably owing to the curious law that when a man's place of business is burned down all the debts he owes are cancelled.

As I remarked before, laundry work in Chicago is frightfully dear, and this is the reason why Chicago women—and, for that matter, most American women—wear no chemise. They wear a kind of woollen or cotton "tights," which takes its place. This fits close to the body, and is probably the secret of the fine figures which American women usually seem to have.

As an instance of the practical view that American, and especially Chicago, women take of life, I asked a Mrs. B—— whom I met why she allowed her husband to go out without even an overcoat, the weather being very cold. "Oh! that's all right," she replied, "for he insured his life last week."

I was very much shocked by this reply, and, seeing my surprise depicted on my face, Mrs. B—— added: "Yes, Fred has insured his life, and the money I shall get at his death would permit me to live very comfortably until I marry again. And of course next time I shall marry much better."

So it goes!

BUILDER OF WAR SHIPS.

The Chicago, Charleston, Cincinnati and Other Ships that Tell of Him.

Naval Constructor Frank L. Fernald, Chief of the Construction Department of the Brooklyn Navy Yard in which department there are between eleven hundred and twelve hundred men constantly employed, is admirably equipped in all respects for the responsible and practical duties of that position. He possesses a thorough knowledge of the methods of shipbuilding of both the old and the new navy. As a constructor he has passed successfully through the evolutionary period of men-of-war construction, and he is also familiar with the work of the ship yards of Europe.

Constructor Fernald, whose name is connected with the construction of so many of Uncle Sam's finest ships, is an exceedingly modest man, withal. His relations with master workmen and many of the journeyman employes are unusually cordial, and he misses no opportunity to advance the interests of steady and capable men. He prepared the preliminary plans for the steel cruiser Chicago and the Dolphin, and as a member of this Board he also engaged in the supervision of these ships, as well as of the cruisers Boston and Atlanta while they were under construction.

FRANK L. FERNALD.

The Union Iron Works, at San Francisco, was the scene of Constructor Fernald's labor in 1887, where he was ordered to supervise the construction of the cruiser Charleston, which was then about to be built. While on the Pacific coast he had charge of building also the cruiser San Francisco, and of the beginning of the Olympia and the Monterey.

In May, 1891, Mr. Fernald took charge of the construction department at the New York Navy Yard. Within the period embraced in his present assignment more ships have received extensive repairs at this yard, and more men have been kept constantly at work here, than at any period in the history of the station since the war. Under his care the new and handsome cruiser Cincinnati has been almost wholly built, and it is claimed that as far as workmanship, general design of fitting and finish are concerned this ship has no superiors and few equals. The battle ship Maine has been brought almost to completion under his charge.

Mr. Fernald was a member of the Stability Board, which was convened to remedy faults of design, and it was at his suggestion that the new gunboats, the Machias and the Castine, were ordered to be cut in two and lengthened. This novel and difficult work was done under his charge in a remarkably short time. The Machias is now on her way to China and the Castine is ready for sea.

Put Salt on Coal.

At this time of the year, when the coal begins to develop such extraordinary possibilities in the way of rapid consumption, housekeepers are eagerly on the lookout for something that will, at least, prevent waste, if it cannot by any other means make a ton go further. There are several preparations for this purpose sold under fanciful names, but the basis of most of them is ordinary salt. If the latter is sprinkled liberally over the coal, either in the bin or as it is put into the furnace, it will make it burn more evenly to a clean ash, and will also prevent clinkers. Of course, there is some chemical explanation for this, but the ordinary housewife does not care much about the reasons. She is satisfied that it is so.

[Copyright, 1894, by Bacheller, Johnson & Bacheller.]

If innocent curiosity and love of fun had carried many to the New Year handshaking three years before, a more serious interest, not unmixed with curiosity still, swelled the party tonight.

It was a mile out of town. The night was stormy, the roads were heavy and most of the wagons without cover, but the festive spirit is impervious to weather the world over, and there were umbrellas in Simpkinsville, and overcoats and "tarpaulins."

Everybody went. Even certain persons who had not previously been able to master their personal animosities sufficiently to resolve to present themselves for the midnight handshaking, and had decided to nurse their grievances for another year, promptly decided to bury their little hatchets, and join the party.

To storm a citadel of sorrow, whether the issue should prove a victory for besiegers or besieged, was no slight lure to a people whose excitements were few, and whose interests were limited to the personal happenings of their small community.

It is a crime in the provincial code social to excuse oneself from a guest. To deny a full and cordial reception to all the town would be to ostracise oneself forever, not only from its society but from all its sympathies.

The weak-hearted hostess rallied all her failing energies for the emergency. And there was no lack of friendliness in her pale old face as she greeted her most unwelcome guests with extended hands.

If her thin cheeks flushed faintly as her neighbors' happy daughters passed before her in game or dance, her solicitous observers, not suspecting the pain at her heart, whispered: "Mis' Meredith is chirpin' up a'ready. She looks a heap better 'n when we come in." So little did they understand.

If mirth and numbers be a test, the old year party at the Mereditns was assuredly a success.

Human emotions swing as pendulums from tears to laughter. Those of the guests to-night who had declared that they knew they would burst out crying as soon as they entered that house, were the ones who laughed the loudest.

"Spinning the plate," "dumb-crambo," "pillow," "how, when and where," such were the innocent games that composed the simple diversions of the evening, varied by music by the village string band and occasional songs from the girls, all to end with a "Virginia break-down" just before twelve o'clock, when the handshaking fun should commence.

It seemed a very merry party and yet, in speaking of it afterward, there were many who declared that it was the saddest evening they had ever spent in their lives. Some even affirming that they had been "obliged to set up an' giggle the live-long time to keep from cryin' every time they looked at Mis' Meredith."

Whether this were true, or only seemed to be true in the light of subsequent events, it would be hard to say. Certain it was, however, that the note that rose above the storm and floated out the lighted windows was a note of joyous merrymaking. Such was the note that greeted a certain slowly moving wagon, whose heavily-clogged wheels turned into the Mereditns' gate near midnight. The belated guest was evidently one entirely familiar with the premises, for, notwithstanding the darkness of the night, the ponderous wheels turned accurately into the curve beyond the magnolia tree, moved slowly but surely along the drive up to the door, and stopped with hesitation exactly opposite the "landing," well-nigh invisible to-night.

After the ending of the final dance, during the very last moments of the closing year, there was always at the old year party an interval of silence.

The old men held their watches in their hands, and the young people spoke in whispers.

It was this last waiting interval that in years passed the old man Prophet had filled with portent, even though, until his last prophecy, his words had been lightly spoken.

As the crowd sat waiting to-night, watching the hands of the old clock that seemed almost to have stopped, so slow was their movement, listening to the never hurrying tick-tack of the long pendulum against the wall, it is probable that memory, quickened by circumstances and environment, supplied to every mind present a picture of the old man, as he had often stood before them.

A careful turn of the front door latch, so slight a click as to be scarcely discernible, came at this moment as the clank of a sledge-hammer, turning all heads with a common impulse toward the slowly opening door, into which limped a tall, muffled figure, that seemed to the startled eyes of the company to reach quite to the ceiling. Those sitting near the door started back in terror at the apparition, and all were on their feet in a moment.

But having entered, the figure stood still just within the door. And before there was time for action or question, even, a bundle of old wraps had fallen and the old man Prophet, bearing in his arms a golden-haired cherub of about two years, stood in the presence of the company.

The revulsion of feeling, indescribable by words, was quickly told by fast-flowing tears. Looking upon the old man and the child, everyone present read a new chapter in the home tragedy, and wept in its presence.

Coming from the dark night into the light, the old man could not for a moment discern the faces he knew, and when the little one, shrinking from the glare, hid her face in his hair, it was as if time had turned back, so perfect a restoration was the picture of a familiar one of the old days. No word had yet been spoken, and the ticking of the great clock and the crackling fire mingled with sobs were the only sounds that broke the stillness, when the old man, having gotten his bearings, walked directly up to old Mrs. Meredith and laid the child in her arms. Then, losing no time but, pointing to the clock that was slowly nearing the hour, he said, in a voice tremulous with emotion: "De time is most here. Is you all ready to shek hands? Ef you is—everybody—turn round and come with me."

As he spoke, he turned back to the still open door, and before those who had followed had taken in his full meaning, he had drawn into the room a slim, shrinking figure, and little May Day Meredith, pale, frightened and weather-beaten, stood before them.

If it was her own father who was first to grasp her hand, and if he carried her in his arms to her mother, it was that the rest deferred to his first claim, and that their hearty and affectionate greetings came later in their proper order. The striking of the great clock now, mingled with the sound of joy and of weeping—the congratulations, handshaking and words of praise fervently uttered—made a scene ever to be held dear in the annals of Simpkinsville. A scene beyond words of description—a family meeting which even lifetime friends recognized as too sacred for their eyes and hurried, weeping, away.

It was when the memorable, sad, joyous party was over, and all the guests were departing, that Prophet, following old man McMonigle out, called him aside for a moment. Then putting into his hands a small object, he said in a tremulous voice:

"Much obliged for de loan o' de pistol, Marse Dan'l. Hold her keerful, caze she's loaded des de way you loaded her—all 'cept'n de barrel. I ain't never fired her but one't."

THE END.

SUSTENANCE IN THE PEANUT.

It Is Something More Than a Circus Luxury.

It is not, even yet, generally known that the peanut which has been so popular for a long time as a semi-luxury—especially on circus days—is in reality a food material of remarkable sustaining power. This fact has been demonstrated by experiments in German hospitals, where the value of soup made from peanut meal—that is, the meal left after the oil of the nuts had been expressed for other purposes—was so fully demonstrated that the ministry of war of that great country is contemplating the introduction of peanut meal as a ration of the German army. The peanut, as is well known, is a herbaceous annual of the pulse family. It grows in the southern states, and throughout the tropics. It has one peculiarity which is worthy of mention. The plants bloom above the ground as is natural; but after the decay of the petals, the flower stalks, which alone bear fruit, bend over and penetrate the ground to the depth of several inches. On these the nuts grow, the plants being killed by the first frost, when the fruitage ripens.

"I THOUGHT you told me that Miss Brown had spent a great deal of money on her voice!" "Well, so I did." "But she can't sing." "Well, I didn't say that she could, did I?"—Truth.

"THE DOG HAD A SMOKE, TOO."

An Exhibition that Made Holiday Shoppers Pause with All Their Harry.

The one leisurely figure in the crowd was a young man in a long frock coat, embellished with a bunch of carnations, the most shining of shoes, and a tall hat scarcely less shining, who had a black spaniel attached to a chain. The spaniel would have liked to be leisurely, too, but he had to skip about with much agility to avoid having his paws trodden on.

In his saunterings the young man came to a little heap of packing boxes obstructing the sidewalk. He unfastened the dog's chain and whistled in a peculiar way. The spaniel leaped up on the highest box as if it were only a step, instead of four feet high, and sat up with one paw at salute. The hurrying shoppers stopped as if a brick wall had appeared in front of them, and gathered around the box. The young man took no notice of them.

"Now, my boy," said he to the dog, "we'll have a quiet smoke. Cigarettes or pipe?"

As he spoke he drew one of each of these articles from his pocket. The spaniel barked when the pipe appeared.

"Pipe, eh?" said his master. "You're very English, chappie, aren't you? Well, I'll take the cigarette myself."

He handed the pipe to the dog, who seized it in his teeth. Then the young man filled and lighted it, lighting his own cigarette with the same match. The dog held the pipe up and apparently puffed at it.

"Like it now, don't you?" said the young man; "but you didn't use to. How did you feel when you first smoked?"

Down dropped the pipe from the spaniel's mouth. He clasped his paws pathetically over his stomach; his ears dropped, his head hung down, and he looked the picture of misery. The crowd roared with delight.

"Why, what a crowd you've gathered, old man," said the master to his dog, in apparent astonishment. "You'll have to move on or the police will be after you. Now say good-by and hop down."

Straightening up, the performer made a military salute first to one side, then to the other, and with a joyful bark jumped down and joined his master as he sauntered on.

"What are you advertising, mister?" called one of the crowd.

But the young man only smiled.

A Church-going Thomas Cat.

Jack is the name of a Maltese cat of the Sly Thomas variety, whose home is in the little town of Milan, a sort of suburb to the city of Ann Harbor, Mich. Jack's penchant is going to church every Sunday. He is a good Presbyterian, and turns up his aristocratic Thomas nose if any of the family tries to tempt him into any other than the Presbyterian Church.

Jack's church-going proclivities date from a period about three years ago. His mistress started to church one Sunday morning, and not until she was at the door of the edifice did she observe that Jack was trotting along at her heels. It was late, and the organ was pealing out the first hymn of the service, so to turn back was out of the question.

"Will you be a good boy, Jack, if I take you in church with me?" and Jack nodded his head as though he understood.

He was picked up and concealed under his mistress's cloak and carried into the church and deposited on a seat in the pew. There he sat quietly and demurely throughout the entire service, purring to himself in a perfectly happy and contented manner and as if he enjoyed the novelty. Unlike many of the deacons, Jack did not once go to sleep, either, but remained awake and alert until the benediction was said.

The services over, Jack was again hidden away under his mistress's wrap and carried out of church, and no one knew that he had been present.

Long before the hour for going to church came around the following Sunday, Jack washed himself, licked his feet in a more than usually careful manner, and strutted around his mistress, brushing against her skirts and purring.

When she left the house to go to church Jack followed at her heels, and, as on the Sunday before, he was carried to his place in the pew under the protecting wing of his mistress's cape.

Extinction of the Antelope.

Upon the far Western plains the antelope, a few years ago so familiar a sight to the traveller by rail or wagon, has now almost wholly disappeared. In Colorado, Texas, and western Kansas shy bands, numbering from two or three to half a dozen antelope, are sometimes sighted, where fifteen years ago the herds were many and large. The extinction of these beautiful fleet creatures, seemingly so near at hand, will be less the result of systematic hunting, such as characterized the extermination of the buffalo, than the encroachments upon their feeding grounds by cattlemen and sheepmen with their herds, and the desultory shooting of sportsmen, ranchmen and cowboys, now so generally distributed over the plains, that the timid animals can find no place of security. In New Mexico the antelopes have almost wholly disappeared from the high plains east of the Rockies, where once they abounded, a few small herds in the southwest of the Territory being about all that remain within its limits.

HIGH LIFE IN HIGH LATITUDES.

Where Nature Furnishes Electric Lights and Other Conveniences.

A newly-wedded Esquimau couple lived in a glittering little ice cottage in the far north. It was a crystal palace. The building was by Frost, the best architect of the Arctic circle. Though the Esquimau and his bride lived far from the great world, they enjoyed many of the conveniences and luxuries of modern life. Snowball cottage and its extensive grounds were illuminated at night by electric lights. The Esquimau wife wore furs and was accustomed to get a new sealskin sacque every month. The cottage floor was ornamented by real polar bear skins as rugs. The tableware was for the most part ivory, contributed by the walrus. As for delicate articles of food, the family could have ices almost every day in the year. For diversion they had an excellent toboggan slide down the side of a glacier.

They owned extensive fishing privileges and a game preserve of almost boundless extent. In the Esquimaux preserves there was almost every kind of game, from an eider duck to a frozen mammoth. They possessed also an amount of crystal ice which an ice company would look upon as a source of great wealth. But they were chiefly rich in the possession of many dogs.

On frosty nights the Esquimau used to harness up his six-in-hand dog cutter and take his bride flying across the country under the aurora borealis, on a white road, as wide as the continent, that stretched to the North pole.

The aurora borealis was much cheaper, neater and more brilliant than wax candles. It was also safer than gas, for you couldn't blow it out. They used to go to bed by it. They employed it to light up their demesne and crystal cottages. It had merits which advertisers attribute to all lights—it was beautiful and cheap.

The Esquimau couple were blessed with a son. People in more favored latitudes often talk about precocious children. He was the most precocious child anyone ever heard of. He cut his teeth when he was only a day old. He learned to talk when he was only a day and a half old. At the age of twenty-one days he was a grown man. Of course a day and a night in the Arctic regions are fifty-two weeks long, but this should not be permitted to detract from a pleasant story of infant precocity.—Puck.

Mrs. KUHN.

Mrs. KUHN, of 618 E. 16th Street, New York City, writes as follows: "It pleases me to state that I had a running sore upon my neck, and had it operated upon three times, and still it was not cured. Good cheer and comfort to your hearthstones all!
E'en such will surely come to those who call
On Front street, seven-forty-seven, West,
Regarding fuel worth the season's quest.
Good coal, good weight, good service here you'll find,
Exceeding promptness and attention kind.

Throughout the world in vain to better see,
Each screened of "buckwheat" and of dust made free:
Vieing with all in care for lawns and drives,
Each employe to win your favor strives,
Nor will you fail to find the prices here
Scaled at the market rates throughout the year.

THE BOOTH OF HIS RACE.

He Delights a Plainfield Audience, and Is Coming Back Again.

Bethel Chapel was well filled last evening with an enthusiastic and appreciative audience to listen to R. Henri Strange, the celebrated elocutionist and tragedian, who is styled the Booth of the Negro race.

The evening's entertainment commenced with a piano solo by Miss Alice Maynard. After another piano solo by Miss Maud Doyle, Rev. W. A. Alexander introduced Mr. Strange.

His first selection was "Smiting the Rock", a very pathetic poem which he rendered in a way to bring tears to the eyes of his hearers. But in the next selection, a recitation and song "The Low Backed Car", the tears were changed to laughter which threatened to raise the roof. So his selections continued, one pathetic and the next humorous. His character representations were very realistic, particularly that of the maniac, in which he entered into the spirit of his subject so thoroughly that his listeners were for the time carried away with the idea that he was insane. "The Death of King John" was also very well represented, the agony of the dying king being portrayed to perfection. During the intermissions between his selections, Miss Maude Doyle and Miss Mamie Hall each rendered several selections on the piano.

After the programme was concluded, it was announced that Mr. Strange would visit Plainfield again on some future day, and that his selections would be entirely new. Those that missed hearing him last evening should be sure to take advantage of the next opportunity, as Mr. Strange is certainly an artist.

It was announced that after the entertainment was concluded refreshments would be served. The greater part of the audience remained to enjoy the excellent refreshments provided, and a short talk with their neighbors and friends.

The efficient committee in charge of the refreshments consisted of the following: Mrs. George Henry, Miss Ida Henry, Miss Mamie Wally, Miss Emma Marcellus, Miss Lena Perry and Miss Stella Hill. Mrs. Walker acted as cashier.

Barely Won.

The Plainfield Bowling Club went to Cranford last evening and surprised themselves by bad bowling. Several times through the game defeat threatened them. The score by frames shows how closely they were followed, and then just escaped by eight pins.

A Japanese in Plainfield Tonight.

The war between China and Japan, the contest between belated barbarism and modern civilization, is a subject which is full of interest to everyone—from the school boy, who gazes with amazement at the curious colored cartoons representing the Oriental conflict, to the philosopher, who seeks to know the causes of all events.

A rare opportunity to learn about this singular war, from an inside point of view, will be afforded this evening, when a native of Japan, now living in America, Rev. Watari Kitashima, Ph.D., will speak upon this subject in All Souls Church, Park avenue near Seventh street, at 8. Admission is 25 cents.

Types of American Life.

In the issue of Town Topics for Jan. 3 is begun the publication of an exceptionally interesting series of portraits, in colors, exact reproductions of handsome water-color sketches made from life. The portraits will be representative of the most distinguished "types" of American citizens, and will form a collection worthy of preservation. The originality of the artist's work and the unusual fidelity of the reproduction can hardly fail to surprise and delight people that have become wearied of finding conventional "pictures" in the periodicals of the day. The new portraits in Town Topics will be striking, unique and beautiful.

Carlton Cornwell, foreman of the Gazette, Middletown, N. J., believes that Chamberlain's Cough Remedy should be in every home. He used it for a cold and it effected a speedy cure. He says: "It is indeed a grand remedy, I can recommend to all. I have also seen it used for whooping cough with the best results." 25 and 50c bottles for sale at Reynolds's Pharmacy, Park and North avenues. T. S. Armstrong, manager.

PLAINFIELD'S STREETS.

Annual Report of Robert A. Meeker, Commissioner.

To the Honorable the Common Council of the City of Plainfield:

GENTLEMEN—I would herewith present to your honorable body my annual report of the work done and the moneys expended upon the streets of the city during the past year.

The work done has been principally in the nature of street cleaning, repairs and grading in anticipation of macadamizing after the sewers are laid and the trenches have been allowed to properly settle.

The only new macadamizing done during the year was on West Front street for a distance of 1,000 feet westerly from Grant avenue, one-half of the expense being borne by the property owners; and on Grant avenue between Front and Fourth streets, one-half of the cost being paid by the Plainfield Street Railway Company.

Street cleaning has occupied one-third of the time during the past year; this includes the two patrol hand-carts in constant use in the business centre of the city; these have proved so satisfactory to the merchants that I would advise the extension of this system throughout the more densely populated portions of the city. Beyond these limits we must use carts and horses, especially on those streets that are not macadamized and also on those that are only macadamized for a width of sixteen feet in the centre; while this latter is a great improvement upon the old dirt road it does not meet the necessities of the case in our thickly populated streets, which should all be macadamized from curb to curb, thus adding materially to the cleanliness, appearance and comfort of our streets.

One team is kept constantly going from point to point in the city repairing holes in the macadam, cleaning culverts and removing obstacles from the gutters and roadways.

The sprinkling of our streets should be done in a more systematic manner, both for the comfort of the public and the preservation of our macadam, for when the street is allowed to become too dry the binding material is loosened and converted into dust and the stones are then easily kicked out of place by every passing hoof; thus the road becomes filled with ruts and holes that must be repaired at once; on the other hand, if the road is too wet the binding is softened, thus the improper wetting of the streets causes us much extra expense for repairs.

The grading done during the past year is as follows: Midway avenue, better known as the old railroad bank, has been brought down to the level of the surrounding property between Fillmore and Johnston avenues, and the dirt thus obtained has been used to fill up the gravel pits and cover the ashes and other debris previously dumped there; in this work we employed the men furnished by the Citizens Organized Aid Association.

The other grading done was on the Rocap Hill on West Front street, Central street between South and LaGrande avenues, LaGrande avenue between Richmond and Central streets, Kensington avenue between Watchung and Prospect avenues, West Third street from New street to Plainfield avenue, Liberty street from Fourth street to the railroad, West Fourth street from Park avenue to New street, and Watchung avenue between Fifth and Sixth streets. The last was also re-macadamized.

Extensive repairs were required in the Netherwood district because of the great rainfall in the early Summer, which caused bad washouts on the hillsides and carried a quantity of material into the gutters in the lower lands, all of which had to be removed at once to prevent greater damage.

Many culverts have had to be enlarged to provide the greater water-way required by macadamized streets in good condition, viz: hard and smooth, and that therefore allow the water to run off quickly instead of absorbing a great portion into the surface upon which it falls.

Many new crosswalks have been laid to connect the flagging put down on the adjacent blocks.

There have been nearly 2½ miles of flagging, and a little less than two miles of curbing, laid and set during the past year under my supervision.

Madison avenue south of Ninth street has been graded so as to conform to the grade of adjacent streets. This was the proviso wisely insisted upon by the Street Committee before they would recommend the acceptance of the street by the city. This should be made the invariable requirement for the acceptance of any new street by the city, and property owners opening new streets should so grade them in justice to themselves and to the prospective purchasers, for there is no better nor cheaper time to grade a street than when the land is unimproved.

I call your attention to this matter because there are people living today upon so-called streets that have never been properly graded, the surface water running off into adjacent vacant lots, which system of drainage answers very well until said lots are filled up; then the water is forced into the street forming a pond, or mud hole at least, from which the property owner demands relief from the city and is surprised and indignant when informed that the road on which he lives is not an accepted street of the city. If the attention of the public was more particularly called to this subject there would be less of this penny-wise and pound-foolish system of opening streets through new property.

The work demanding prompt attention during the coming year is as follows, viz: West Front street throughout its entire length, with the exception of that portion macadamized this year, West Third street from Plainfield avenue to Madison avenue is ready for permanent improvement, the grading being done, the fences moved back to the estaolished side lines and the sewer laid; West Fourth street should be completed as soon as the sewer is laid through it; South avenue is very rough and should be repaired as soon as the weather will permit as it is the continuation of the much-traveled county roads; East Ninth street should also be macadamized as soon as the sewer trench is thoroughly settled: Plainfield avenue between Sixth and Seventh streets should be graded and remacadamized.

Washington street and some others in the heart of the city are in poor condition and require attention, but it is not advisable to do anything in the nature of permanent improvements until the sewers have been laid through them.

Street cleaning, including the removal of snow from the business streets, is, of course a matter that must be attended to, also the scraping and turnpiking of the forty-five miles of dirt roads within our corporate limits which must be done every Spring, and the removal of obstructions caused by storms, form what might be termed the perennial work of this department.

The following is the amount of flagging and curbing laid and set during the year:

INDIANS MAKE MERRY.

Paugh-Caugh-Naugh-Sinque Social and Dance, a Most Successful Affair.

The entertainment and dance given by Paugh-Caugh-Naugh-Sinque Tribe, No. 193, I. O. R. M., at Sanger and Turn Verein Hall last evening, occasioned the assembly of over three hundred guests who enjoyed themselves until the wee small hours "tripping the light fantastic" to the excellent music furnished by N. H. Guttman.

During the early evening an entertainment was given by local talent which was most cordially received by the assembled friends.

The guests were received at the door by Brethren John H. Blimm and Harry C Runyon who were garbed in beautiful Indian costumes appropriate to the occasion. The decorations of the hall and stage were very tasteful and effective. Across the room hung a banner inscribed "Paugh-Caugh-Naugh-Sinque Tribe, No. 193", and depending from the centre over the stage a shield bearing the words "In honor of the ladies who assisted at the late fair".

The entertainment, which was enthusiastically received by the large assembly, was as follows:

Introductory remarks by John H. Carney, P. G. H., who was the efficient Master of Cerrmonies; recitation, E. H. Neal, "The Polish Boy"; song, "When the Days Grow Longer", Dr. Bedford; humorous stories, M. J. Cashen; piano solo, Mrs. Fred Canfield; cornet solo, B. J. La Vere; Swedish dialect, W. S. Bullock; comic songs, Charles Ward, accompanied by Miss May Flanagan; Myers and Schroede, the Acrobats, in their famous Brother act; tableau, "True Redmanship", by members of the tribe in costume, assisted by little Miss Mamie Carney as the Angel; tableau, "Peace", by members in costume, assisted by Miss Ella Sebring as "The Goddess Paugh-Caugh-Naugh-Sinque", and Miss Carney.

The programme throughout was excellently rendered.

The thanks of the tribe are extended to Miss Sebring, Miss Flanigan, Mrs. Canfield, and Messrs. Ward, Cashen, LeVere, Myers and Schroder for their favors, and it is only necessary to add that their various specialties were rendered in the usual excellent manner.

The dance which followed was enjoyed by the large gathering, and the guests dispersed with hearty thanks to Paugh-Caugh-Naugh-Sinque Tribe for the enjoyment given them.

The various committees are deserving of the highest praise at the successful issue of the affair, and the party was the most select gathering ever assembled in Sangerbund Hall.

Grand Officers Install.

A special convocation of Jerusalem Chapter, No. 24, R. A. M. was held last evening, at which Dr. H. O. Wagoner of Somerville, Grand King of the Grand Royal Arch Chapter of New Jersey, and Joshua Doughty, Past High Priest of Keystone Chapter, Somerville, installed the newly elected officers. The Marked Masters Degree was conferred on two members. There was a large delegation of the home chapter present, also a number of visitors which included Robert Day, Stewart Hoffman, T. H. Hoffman, John Ringleman, and Richard Brokaw of Somerville; C. C. Howard formerly of Massachusetts, and F. K. Van Auken of Washington, D. C. At the close of the ceremonies all were invited to the banquet hall where a sumptuous supper was served.

Captain of Host—W. H. Sebring.
Principal Sojourner—Henry Woodland.

Sleighing by Trolley.

The latest in sleds is the double tandem observed by a Daily Press reporter last evening. It was attached to a trolley car. The merry little lads came to grief at the corner of Front street and Watchung avenue, their sleds catching in the rail and causing an amusing tangle of legs, arms and coasters. The entire party emerged from the snow unharmed, and, pulling themselves together, sought other vehicles to continue their sport of catching on behind.

Music Hall Changes Hands.

Isaac Varian, lessee and manager of Music Hall, has not been in town in several days, and today his son Robert C. announces a transfer of the control of the hall to R. C. Varian & Co. The "Co." is Joseph Sohl, who has associated himself with the junior Varian.

—The Victor Wheelmen did not meet last evening on account of the non-appearance of the members.

DURAND WINS.

Awarded $200 Damages, and Given a Complete Vindication.

Another Plainfield case was decided in Elizabeth yesterday. Frederick Durand of Plainfield sued the Sherman Outfitting Company and its manager for damages for false arrest and imprisonment. The case, as the testimony showed, was as follows:

Durand had purchased of the Sherman Outfitting Company some furniture under the installment plan. He was away in Canada for a while and the payments defaulted. The company took away the furniture. Durand on returning home was incensed, and went to the store. The manager was not in, but Durand expressed his wrath freely, and made the remark "that he had friends in Plainfield and would get even with the company". The next night or very soon after a plate glass window was broken in the store by some one throwing a stone through it. The manager suspected Durand of this offense because of his threat, and an hour after the breaking saw him on the street and ordered a policeman to lock him up. Without a warrant the policeman undertook to take Durand to the station house, but in passing where he lived it was shown by several witnesses that he could not have committed the offense, as at the time the glass was broken he was downstairs in the saloon under the rooms where he lived.

The policeman let him go, but the manager of the company had a warrant issued for his arrest. Durand was held until he got bail, and when he was tried was acquitted, his alibi being conclusive.

Judge VanSyckel granted a non-suit so far as the Sherman Outfitting Company was concerned, holding that it could not be held responsible for the unlawful act of its manager, as he was not authorized to cause Durand's arrest.

The case was proceeded, and finished yesterday.

The jury were out some time, when they returned with a verdict for Durand, assessing his damages at $200. This award is against the manager of the company.

The company had no witnesses whatever against Mr. Durand, and instead gave him a complete vindication, stating that they would cheerfully publish his exoneration in all the papers. This vindication he feels to be of more value than all the damages.

That Elephant.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE DAILY PRESS:—Speaking of the elephant—it is not exactly a live animal, but an awful big thing, and when we look out upon the street day or night that awful thing is before our eyes. It stands partly in the street and partly in the ditch. It hinders travel on that side of Fifth street, between Central avenue and New street, and entirely shuts off people from driving up to the enterance of one residence. It has stood there some three weeks, and through the holidays. It is the thing that the sewer contractors undertook to roll Fifth street with but did n't. Whoever is the owner, I do n't know; but whoever it may be, if he will prove property and pay for this notice, we shall not object to its removal.

Service Omitted This Evening.

The regular Friday evening service at the Church of the Redeemer will be omitted this week, owing to the absence of the rector, Dr. Johnston, who was formerly assistant rector of St. Peters, the largest Episcopal Church of Albany. Dr. Johnston has gone to pay a short visit to his many friends in that place, and to preach for the rector of St. Peters Church Sunday. Dr. W. W. Page, formerly of the Church of the Heavenly Rest in this city, will officiate Sunday for Dr. Johnston.

The M. E. Revival.

The revival meetings that are being held in Vincent Chapel were continued last evening. The singing of the Drew Seminary quartette formed a very effective part of the service. There were short addresses by Rev. Dr. C. R. Barnes and Mr. Rowe and Mr. Raymond of Drew Seminary. There was also a solo by Mr. Rowe, "Throw Out the Life-Line".

Tomorrow evening there will be a special meeting for the young people. Meetings will be held also this evening, Sunday and Monday evenings.

Wm. Jackson is Dead.

William Jackson, the Negro who was so badly frozen Wednesday night, died in Muhlenberg Hospital at 2 this morning. The remains have been taken charge of by A. Vanderbeek, overseer of the poor.

SANTA CLAUS LINGERS.

He Pays His Final Plainfield Visit to the First Church of Christ.

The Sunday-school of the First Christ and their friends gathered at their hall on West Front street last evening and passed a most pleasant time in celebrating their Christmas entertainment. A very large evergreen tree adorned with lots of pretty things caught the eyes of the little ones, as did also the old-fashioned chimney where Santa Claus was to make his appearance.

The exercises opened with singing by the school, after which Superintendent John Staats made a few remarks of welcome. Prayer was then offered by Elder B. W. Hand.

The programme was then given as follows: Recitations—"The First Christmas Night", Edith Wells; "We Have Found the Christ", John VanMiddlesworth; Singing by the School; "A Lesson Leaf", John Madden; "A Song of Gladness", May Frazee; "Peace on Earth", Belle VanNest; "The Christmas Song", Bertie Hand; "Christmas is Coming", Hattie Bush; "Our Willie", Henry Staats; Dialogue—"Wonderful Children's Day", May Frazee, Mabel Hand and Etta Staats; "The Collection", Robert Wells; "Santa Claus in the Mountains", Mabel Wilson; "Hurrah for Christmas", George Clicknor; "Christmas Carol", Katy Jeroiaman; "The Christ", Allie Van Nest; "Christmas is Here", Spencer Clicknor; "Christmas Stocking", Etta Staats; song, "Hark, the Bells Ringing", Sadie Hand; singing by the school; "Kris Kringle", Sadie Hand.

At the conclusion of the last recitation Santa Claus came down the chimney, in the person of David Bush, with a pack loaded with presents for all, and which were distributed.

The recitations given were finely rendered, and reflected much credit on the members of the school.

Among the presents given was a very handsome pair of kid gloves, which B. W. Hand received from his Sunday-school class.

The entertainment closed at a reasonable hour, and when the audience left they decided that they had enjoyed themselves very much.

OBITUARY.

Henry McLean.

In the death of Henry McLean of Liberty street, which occurred Wednesday, Plainfield loses an excellent citizen. He had been ill for the past eight weeks with Bright's disease, a great sufferer.

Mr. McLean was sixty-four years old, and had been in the employ of Charles Potter twenty-four years, having engaged with him in Norwich in 1871. Later on he worked for him in Hope Valley. He came to Plainfield between 15 and 16 years ago, and has resided here since that time. He had charge of the gear-cutting department at Potters, and was highly esteemed by his employer as a good workman. The only society of which he was a member was the Potter Press Works Aid Society. He was a regular attendant of the First Methodist Episcopal Church.

A widow, Sarah McLean, one daughter, Maggie, and two sons, Harry and James, survive him.

The funeral will be held tomorrow afternoon at 2:30 from his late home, corner of Orchard place and Liberty street, Rev. Dr. C. R. Barnes officiating, and interment will be in the Methodist cemetery.

Minnie Lester All Next Week.

The sale of seats for Minnie Lester's Music Hall engagement opened at the box office this morning, and a steady stream of patrons has poured in and out of the lobby of the theatre ever since. From the present indications there will not be even standing room when the curtain rises on "Anne, the Dancing Girl", Monday night.

The business done by Miss Lester this season is phenomenal. According to the Gloversville Standard of Oct. 1, the attendance at the previous Saturday matinee and evening was over 3 000 paid admissions. This, for a town that gets the finest attractions on the road, and at the conclusion of a two-days engagement, would seem to be sufficient guarantee that Miss Lester has surrounded herself with a capable company.

By using a "lady's ticket" Monday night you can take your wife, your girl, or somebody else's girl free of charge, by complying with the simple directions printed on the ticket. There are no 50-cent seats (except the box seats) for this engagement, the prices remaining at 10, 20 and 30 cents. The management promise that the theatre will be thoroughly heated for this engagement; the steam will be turned on tomorrow morning and left on during Saturday, Sunday and Monday, thus insuring a comfortable evening to all attending, and every crack and crevice through which cold could intrude has been caulked with oakum.

—It seems hardly possible, but nevertheless it is true, that on an average every one-fifth person you meet wears W. L. Douglas shoes. Did you ever realize what an immense undertaking it is to supply one sample of wearing apparel to over one million people?

CONNECTICUT BANKS.

State Commissioners' Report Most Encouraging and Satisfactory.

Hartford, Conn., Jan. 4.—The annual report of the state bank commissioners, addressed to Governor Coffin, has been made public. It shows the condition of the savings banks, state banks and trust companies on Oct. 1, 1894. The commissioners report that it is a most encouraging and satisfactory feature of the financial condition of this state to be able to show that Connecticut and its savings institutions have weathered the recent financial storm with so little permanent check or disturbance.

A marked increase is shown on loans secured by real estate mortgages, and the advances of collateral and personal securities have decreased.

Real estate loans increased $1,790,548 and collateral loans and personal loans decreased $1,680,031. Real estate held by foreclosure has decreased $34,212 and the cash on hand and in bank has increased $283,788.

There has been a total increase of deposits in savings banks during the year amounting to $2,961,638. There are 337,254 depositors in the state or about one for each two inhabitants and the total amount of deposits is $112,271. The sum of $5,293,047 has been declared in dividends during the year There are 186 depositors who have over $10,000 each to their credit.

The total assets of all the savings banks in the state are $146,020,795 and they have a surplus of $5,505,451.

CONDITION OF THE B. & O.

President Mayer Denies That the Company Is Harrassed by Debt.

Baltimore, Jan. 4.—President Chas. F. Mayer, of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad company, has broken his long silence in reference to the rumors relating to his company's financial condition, and makes a sweeping denial that the property is harassed by debt or otherwise.

In answer to a query from a capitalist, who is largely interested in the road, he has written a significant letter, in which he calls attention to the fact that the fixed charges, car trusts, sinking funds, etc., due Jan. 1, amounting to nearly $1,000,000, were paid without borrowing a dollar.

"I name this fact especially," Mr. Mayer says, "because it is not unusual for us to make a loan for the unusually heavy payments Jan. 1. I doubt if the Baltimore & Ohio has owed so small a floating debt for twelve or fifteen years, perhaps longer, and it never had the large volume of stocks and bonds it now has, something over $16,000,000—not put down at their face value, but rather at their market value or far below their intrinsic value. I can safely say the road has not been in so strong a position as now for at least fifteen years."

THE LAST KING OF NAPLES.

Buried with Royal Pomp from the Church in Arco.

Vienna, Jan. 4.—Francis II., the last king of Naples, was buried yesterday from the parish church in Arco, the Tyrol. The weather, although cold, was dry and clear and an enormous throng of spectators gathered in the streets to see the procession. Everything was done with royal pomp. The chief mourners were the Duke of Caserta, Francis II.'s nephew, and his sons. They were followed in the procession by several princes of the house of Tuscany, the Duke of Parma, Prince William of Hohenzollern, and a few Neapolitan and Sicilian noblemen. The body was escorted by two battalions of Tyrolese cuirassiers.

Safe Crackers Put to Flight.

Bethlehem, Pa., Jan. 4.—While safe crackers were at work in Clauser's country store, five miles from here, they were susprised by Harry Clauser, aged 19 years, who slept over the store. Shots were exchanged and one of the burglars was badly wounded but made his escape. He could be traced ten miles by loss of blood. The burglars left a kit of tools and a quantity of dynamite sticks behind.

Capt. Howgate's Case.

Washington, Jan. 4.—Judge McComas has sustained the position of the United States district attorney in the Howgate case, holding that three new indictments found against Capt. Howgate, ex-chief of the signal service, for forgery and embezzlement, were not barred by the statute of limitations. The trial of cases on their merits was set down for Jan. 21.

To Manage the St. Louis Team.

St. Louis, Jan. 4.—A. C. Buckenberger, formerly manager of the Pittsburg baseball team, has closed a contract with President Von der Ahe to manage the St. Louis Browns for the coming season. Nearly all of the old players have been re-engaged, but Buckenberger will look out for a third-baseman and a catcher.

Gen. Baratieri Confident.

Rome, Jan. 4.—Gen. Baratieri, commander of the Italian forces in East Africa, has returned to Kassala after making a demonstration for several days against the Mahdista. He had with him a force of 5,000 men. He telegraphs that he awaits with full confidence any event and does not wish reinforcements.

To the Memory of His Son.

SIR JOHN THOMPSON BURIED.

Impressive Funeral Services Held in St. Mary's Cathedral.

Halifax, Jan. 4.—All the homage earth can bestow has been paid to the mortal remains of Canada's late premier, and the body has been committed to its tomb. The services at St. Mary's cathedral were the most solemnly impressive ever seen or heard in Canada, and were a fitting termination of the obsequies held in Great Britain by the direction of the queen and the imperial government.

Thousands of strangers from all parts of Canada were present. Among the visitors were many members of parliament, senators, judges and other high officials.

The body was conveyed privately from the council chamber, where it had been lying in state, to St. Mary's cathedral and placed in front of the altar. Accompanying the casket were the wreaths presented by the queen and her representative in Canada. St. Mary's cathedral was completely draped in a funeral hue. Lord Aberdeen, Col. Montgomery Moore and Lieut.-Govs. Daly and Chapleau occupied seats in the chancel. Lady Thompson occupied a position near the catafalque.

Archbishop O'Brien preached an eloquently impressive sermon.

At the conclusion of the sermon the procession formed. It extended over a mile in length. As the cortege moved through the streets it was the most imposing sight ever witnessed in Halifax.

Bishop Cameron, of Antigoniah, conducted the services at the grave.

EXTRA SESSION TALK.

A Statement That the President Has Not Considered the Question.

Washington, Jan. 4.—It is authoritatively stated that President Cleveland has not considered the question of an extra session, and that he does not believe an extra session will be necessary. The authority for this statement is a member of congress who talked with the president specifically upon this subject. This gentleman thinks that the revenues consequent upon the collection of the income tax, the sugar tax and from other sources, will within a few months give the treasury department a comfortable working surplus. He thinks it not improbable that Secretary Carlisle may be compelled to make another sale of probably $50,000,000 of bonds but that when this shall have been done the condition of the treasury will be so improved that no further trouble need be apprehended. The gentleman in question, while not approving the Carlisle banking bill, will vote for it, but says that its failure to become a law even if that should happen, need not cause any apprehension.

"We have struggled along," he said, "for a quarter of a century under the present law, and we can manage to exist under it comfortably until the next congress comes together."

TALKED ON THE CURRENCY.

Pro and Con Arguments Again Resumed in the House.

Washington, Jan. 4.—Less than 100 members of the house of representatives attended the first session of that body after the holiday recess.

Promptly after the call of the committees for report and the usual routine of the opening, Mr. Springer (dem., Ill.), made the motion in connection with which his name is now so well known, and the house, in committee of the whole, Mr. Richardson (dem., Tenn.) in the chair, was proceeding with the discussion of the currency bill, just the same as if no interruption had occurred.

The speakers were Messrs. Black (dem., Ga.), McCreary (dem., Ky.), and Buckner (dem., Ky.), in advocacy of the bill, and Haugen (rep., Wis.), and Adams (rep., Pa.), in opposition. An animated colloquy occurred between Mr. Adams and Mr. Warner (dem., N. Y.) respecting the operation of the McKinley law upon wages of Pennsylvania coal miners. The house then adjourned.

Carter Pleads Guilty.

New York, Jan. 4.—Edward R. Carter, the defaulting clerk of the National Bank of Commerce, who is charged with embezzling $30,000, pleaded guilty before United States Comissioner Shields, and was held for the action of the grand jury. He was taken down from Ludlow Street jail handcuffed to Charles Ross, the Englishman, accused of stealing in London. Carter has not yet secured bail.

Curtis Memorial Committee.

Charleston, S. C., Jan. 4.—A committee has been organized in Charleston to co-operate with the New York committee in erecting a suitable memorial to the late George William Curtis. Judge Charles H. Simonton, of the United States circuit court, was made chairman of the committee and Arthur L. Jones secretary.

Mysterious Death of a Farmer.

LAMBERT GETS A STAY

The Murderer's Life Saved at the Last Moment.

Justice Shiras Issued a Provisional Writ of Error Which Will Give Lawyer Semple Time To Establish His Claim That the Negro Is Legally Dead.

Camden, N. J., Jan. 4.—Theodore Lambert, the negro murderer, who was to have been hanged in this city yesterday, has cheated the gallows for the time being, although the scaffold was ready, the spectators had assembled and the coffin was yawning. The undertaker had made all arrangements. The execution did not occur because Justice Shiras, of the United States supreme court, issued a provisional writ of error which operates as a stay until March 4 and gives Lawyer Semple time to establish his claim, if it can be established, that the negro is already dead, legally, and has been a corpse in the eyes of the law since Dec. 13.

The technical point raised is the first of its kind in the history of New Jersey, and some prominent lawyers believe now that Lambert cannot be hanged.

The murderer had written about twenty farewell letters, saying in each that he had made his peace with God. His spiritual adviser was with him as the hour of execution approached. Lambert declared that he was ready to die. When the reprieve came, however, just half an hour before the trap was to be sprung, the man fell in a faint. When he recovered consciousness he clapped his hands and rolled his eyes in an ecstacy of happiness, and fainted again. Upon being revived a second time he hugged and kissed his lawyer, shouting hysterically, "Glory to God! Glory to God!"

Lambert's mother had already taken her farewell of him. When Lawyer Semple went to her home from the jail she asked:

"Is he dead yet?"

When told of the stay she fell unconscious, lying motionless, as if she had been shot through the heart. As soon as she was able to walk she ran to her son's cell, and they shouted hozannas together.

The contention that Lambert is already legally dead is based upon the following facts:

The date first set for his execution was Dec. 13. Lawyer Semple asked for a reprieve, which the governor at first refused, on the ground that he had no power in the case, as the thirty days' limit from the time of his conviction had expired. Lawyer Semple claimed that conviction dated from the time of sentence, which was Oct. 13, and not from the time of the rendering of the verdict, in which case the time since the sentence was only twenty days. The matter was referred to the attorney-general, and he took the same view of the case as held by Semple. The reprieve until Jan. 3 was then granted. After Dec. 13, the day on which Lambert was to be executed, had passed, Lawyer Semple took the opposite ground, that conviction did not date from sentence, but from the time of the rendering of the verdict. He held that the reprieve was made without authority, and was illegal, and that as the day set for the execution had passed Lambert was legally dead.

Semple first applied upon these grounds to Justice Garrison of the state supreme court, who refused a writ of habeas corpus; then to Chief Justice Beasley, who likewise refused, and then to Judge Dallas of the United States supreme court at Philadelphia, who referred the case to Judge Green of the United States court at Trenton. The hearing was set for Jan. 2. Judge Green was absent when the lawyer reached there, so Semple hurried to Washington, where he got the writ.

Lambert confessed eleven months ago to the crime for which he was sentenced—the murder of William G. Kairer, a wealthy Camden baker, on the morning of Dec. 4, 1893.

Murphy Beats Mackelwiski.

As early as the sixth round Murphy had his man bloody and groggy, but Mackelwiski held out for three more rounds. Before the ninth round was finished the police stopped the fight and Murphy was declared the winner.

WHAT TO EAT

If One Would Follow Great Men's Methods in Acquiring Dyspepsia.

Francis Bacon was plain in his eating tastes. Splendid banquets were provided for his guests, while he himself ate of one or two simple dishes.

Cruden, the compiler of the Bible Concordance, delighted in roast beef. "If you can get it cold, sir, with plenty of mustard, it is fit for the gods."

Napoleon III. was extravagantly fond of the Strasburg pates de foie gras. They were regularly sent from Strasburg for the imperial table in Paris.

Kant, the German philosopher, was content with the simplest food in small quantities. A bit of fish or an egg, with a piece of rye bread, made his meal.

Raphael lived principally on dried fruits, such as figs and raisins, eating them with bread. He had a theory that a meat diet was not good for a painter.

Gibbon delighted in toasted cheese. Late at night he would go to the pantry, procure a supply, and, returning to his room, would toast it before his own fire.

Vitellius, the Roman Emperor, was the most noted glutton of his time. He would eat all he could possibly hold, then take an emetic and begin over again.

Chopin had a weak stomach, and any food taken in large quantities was certain to disagree with him. For several years he lived almost exclusively on liquid diet.

Gray, the author of the "Elegy," was fond of apples. He always kept them in his room, and the fact that they decayed and smelt badly seemed to be no objection.

Claude Lorraine was fond of walnuts, and would spend half a day cracking and eating them, laughing and joking with his friends as he picked the meats from the shells.

Auber's table was provided with every dainty that the Paris market afforded. He was a great eater, but so thin that he once said: "All I eat seems to go to appetite."

Julius Cæsar, when at home, lived as luxuriously as other wealthy and noble Romans; when in camp, on the plainest fare, and not much of that. Pliny says that if Cæsar overate he fell into a lethargy resembling a fainting fit.

Marion, the American Revolutionary general, once feasted an English officer on sweet potatoes, baked in the fire by a darky: and served on a strip of bark, with a log for a table. It is said that the officer resigned and went home, say-it was no use to try to conquer people who could live on sweet potatoes.

Napoleon was not at all choice about his eating. When seated at the table, he would begin at once on anything that was nearest, and in ten or fifteen minutes he had made his dinner. He would eat anything, and, if hungry, in almost any quantity. The battle of Dresden failed of results through an attack of indigestion from an overdose of mutton dressed with onions. When at St. Helena he, for a time at least, had a Chinese cook, who made excellent blood pudding.

"LOVE FOR THE GIRLS."

Dr. Depew's Famous Declaration as It Appears When Analyzed.

What, let us ask, are the personal qualities needed for the perennial enjoyment of that "love for the girls" which Dr. Depew publicly confesses he has maintained for forty years of his life, during which period he has not, as he avers, grown an hour older.

We should say that all the manly virtues are needed, and, more yet, all the natural graces, and yet more, the very best of spirits. A feeble-minded person could not keep up his love for the girls from youth along to Dr. Depew's time of life, nor could a curmudgeon, or a mean fellow, or a very heavy drinker, or a jilter, a cross-tempered man, a mere smiler, a blowhard, a jack-a-dandy, a dull head, a hypocrite, a self-seeker, a hardened bachelor, a patronizing snob, a loose-witted poet or a barefaced humbug.

The man who can love the girls for forty years, and then freshen up his affections daily for new prey, must be good and true, pleasing as a daisy all the time, free as an eagle on the mountain top, and brave as a lion of the African wilds. He must also have some money to spare, and a good deal of leisure, and an expressive countenance, and an excellent command of words, not necessarily the words of flattery, but surely those of appreciation.

It was one of the most wonderful revelations of modern times that President Depew, the commander of men, made in his speech before the Young Ladies' and Young Gentlemen's Montefiore League. We have not yet got tired of repeating the language of his ever-memorable revelation: "I haven't grown an hour in forty years, because I love the girls now as well as I did then." "Ebeu!" cried the Romans when they didn't know what else to say.—New York Sun.

WALT WHITMAN'S YOUTH.

He Wrote Prose and Verse and He Called the Latter "Yawps."

As a young man, Walt Whitman was given to writing prose and verse, the latter of which he was accustomed to call his "yawps," thus showing his early use of the much-criticised word in "Leaves of Grass."

Many stories are told of him which illustrate the warm friendship which he inspired among his comrades. One of these, which may be somewhat apocryphal, will yet serve to illustrate his popularity. On one occasion, when Walt was ceiling through a hole in the ice, a fellow who was somewhat of a bully began interfering with his lines in spite of his remonstrances, and Whitman finally turned to and gave him a sound thrashing.

Not relishing this, the fellow entered a complaint of assault and battery, upon which Walt was brought to trial and a jury impaneled. After the trial of the case the jury returned to court and were asked by the court what their verdict was. The foreman responded: "Didn't hit him hard enough." The judge insisted that this was no verdict, and remanded them to their room, but they again returned and announced the same decision, whereupon there was no course open to the judge but an acquittal.

COTTON IS KING.

NEW ENGLAND MANUFACTURERS MIGRATE SOUTH.

Better Able to Compete in the Markets With British Spindles by Getting Near the Source of the Raw Material. A New Era Dawning.

The recent decision of two of the strongest cotton mill companies of Massachusetts to build large mills in the South to cost $500,000 and $600,000 is destined to have a far reaching effect upon the business interests of that section. It will also arouse New England people to a realization of the fact that their cotton manufacturing interests, which have been so largely instrumental in developing the wealth of their section, have probably nearly reached the limit of growth.

Of course mills now in existence will be eularged from time to time, and some few mills will be built for the production of the finest grade of goods. The real growth of this industry in this country will, however, be in the South. The success of the mills in that section has fully demonstrated that no other section can compete with the South in cotton manufacturing. Up to the present time most of the mills in the South have been established by local men with local money.

Southern men have displayed a peculiar aptitude for this industry, Southern capital has sought it as one of the safest and most profitable investments, and Southern working people have proved to be probably the best cotton mill hands, and all things considered, to be found in the country. For years a good many Southern people were sceptical about the ability of their section to become a great iron producing region, but none of them ever questioned the South's ability to make cotton goods at a profit.

Cotton has been the South's idol. Its worship in times past found expression in the production of the staple, but now it is turning to cotton manufacturing. In a large part of the South a cotton mill is now regarded as a necessary sign of progress in every enterprising community. Under many disadvantages the South has labored to build up its milling business. Limited capital and lack of experience, but especially the former, have kept the business from being overdone.

There has been no rush, no hurrah, no boom in this industry. Steadily and solidly it has been developed. Many companies that started in a small way have from time to time enlarged their plant or built new mills out of surplus earnings, accumulated after paying good dividends. Successful mill companies in Georgia and the Carolinas are now spending $2,000,000 in increasing their equipment and building new mills.

The New England people did not, until a year or so, have much faith in the future of this industry in the South. They would not investigate it carefully. Hence they did not understand the South's advantages. They believed that their cheap and abundant capital, their long experience and their intrenched position in the trade would enable them to hold their own forever. But the South went on building cotton mills, and these mills, much to the disappointment of the New England people, kept on paying dividends.

Even during the great depression of a year ago, while many Northern mills were closed Southern mills with rare exceptions, were run on full time. New England cotton manufacturs at last woke up. They commenced to investigate, and during the last twelve months there has been a revolution in sentiment as to cotton manufacturing in the South.

The statements regarding the advantages of the South for cotton manufacturing, and the predictions in regard to the future of this industry for a long time met only with ridicule on the part of our New England friends. Neither the press nor the people of that section were willing to admit that the South would be able to compete with the New England goods, even in the production of coarse goods. They claimed that it would be impossible for the South to build up its textile interest to the extent of proving a serious competitor with New England.

This position, however, has been gradually abandoned as far as coarse goods is concerned. It will not be very long before New England will have to admit that the South has just as many advantages for manufacturing the finer grade of goods as it had a few years ago for making the coarser grades. This position is now being empuasized by the course of events, and some of the New England papers are freely admitting all that has ever been claimed, so far as coarse goods is concerned.

Furnishing the raw material for more than one-half of the cotton spindles of the world, the South is no longer content to ship its cotton in its unmanufactured form. Manufactured at home it would be worth annually more than $1,000,000,000 instead of $300,000,000 as now. Such an industry as this alone would revolutionize the South. It would furnish employment for hundreds of thousands of hands, and create wealth on a greater scale than any other manufacturing interest has ever done.

Because of these facts, the realization by New England of the South's destiny as the coming cotton manufacturing centre, bringing about a co-operation of local and outside men and money in the great development of this industry, becomes a matter of more than national concern. Even Great Britain, now having one half of the cotton spindles in the world, must soon see that it has reached no limit of growth in this industry, and that henceforth progress in this line will be in the South.

Madam and Mrs.

Sir Charles Lyell says: "The title of 'madam' is given in Charleston and the south of the United States generally to a mother whose son has married. The daughter-in-law then becomes 'Mrs.' By this means they avoid the inelegant phraseology of 'old Mrs. A.'"

This is also to some extent the custom in some parts of the Pacific Slope. It should be more generally adopted, for no mother-in-law wishes to be known as "old Mrs." Woman's sensitiveness as to age is apparently as old as humanity, for Sarah is the only woman whose age is mentioned in the Bible.

MODERN RUFFIANISM.

Puritanism and Rascality Unite in Persecution.

That part of Sullivan county, New York, which borders on the county of Delaware on the northwest is fast gaining an unenviable reputation as a region where ruffianism shows itself in its worst forms. For the last two years there have been stories of outrages committed by lawless persons in the towns of Rockland and Fremont under the guise of White Caps.

The recent tarring and feathering of Charles Berry and his wife in the mountains north of the little town of Acidalia, was the most brutally conducted of many outrages by White caps in either Sullivan or Delaware county.

Berry had by hard work accumulated a small sum of money, and was very religious. These were offences in the eyes of some of the rougher element of the neighborhood, and consequently they undertook to punish him.

Mrs. Berry became the mother of a child about a month ago. A week afterward the baby died. The old women of the neighborhood, who filled the house of the Berrys shortly after, found a mark on the dead infant, and pronounced it a witch's mark, and the story was speedily spread that a witch had caused its death.

This was made the pretext for the visit of six men to the Berry home. They took Mr. Berry from his bed and dumped him in the snow, stripped him of his garments, and while he begged and prayed for deliverance they daubed him from head to foot with tar. One went into the house, ripped open a feather bed, and the ruffians covered their victim with the feathers.

They then re-entered the house and tore the clothing from Mrs. Berry, and despite her screams and pleadings for mercy, they smeared her with tar and sprinkled her with feathers.

When the story was first made public it found few believers, but those who live in Long Eddy, a station on the Erie Railway, about ten miles distant, declare that all that has been told of this barbarous treatment of the Berrys is true. In one instance they broke up a religious meeting out of sheer wantonness. In another they took umbrage because the teacher of the public school refused to drink and carouse with them and they succeeded in greatly demoralizing the school.

At Livingston Manor, a station on the Ontario and Western Railroad, about twenty miles east of Acidalia, there have been several White Cap outrages. Samuel Landau, a New York clothing dealer, was one of the first victims. He started a clothing store in Livingston Manor last June and undersold the local merchants. He received threatening letters bearing a skull and cross bones, and his house was finally bombarded with heavy timber by masked men until the annoyance became so great that he had to return to the city.

Then followed the persecution of John Carl, a music teacher, who was ducked in the mill pond one night by White Caps for being drunk. Upon promising to reform he escaped further molestation.

Patrick Edwards was ducked in the Willowemoc for a similar offense and told to leave town, which he did. Next was Benjamin Hitt, a farm hand. He incurred the displeasure of the White Caps and was notified to leave. He took the advice.

At Kingsbury Hill, just over the Sullivan county border, in Delaware, the White Caps appeared on October 5 before the house of Emmet Morse and threatened to blow up the building with dynamite. Morse, it was charged, had taken seventeen year old Mary Root from her husband, to whom she had been married less than a year. Morse barricaded his house and armed himself and Mary with shotguns, and bade defiance to the band. They held a council of war and decided to retreat.

Another White Cap outrage has been reported from Wolf Hollow, a little place in the mountains of Monroe county, Pa., near Stroudsburg. "Ike" Brewer, with his family, lives in Wolf Hollow. In the summer he peddles blackberries, corn and vegetables, and is known by almost every man, woman and child in the two Stroudsburgs. He is said to possess a snug little competence. His home was visited on Saturday night by a band of White Caps. They wore white pillow cases over their heads. They surrounded the house about midnight and woke up Brewer, who appeared at the second story window. When he saw their masks he sprang from the window, and ran to his brother's house, a half mile away, attired only in his night garments.

HOW TO BUY A HORSE.

Don't Trust Even Your Brother's Honesty in a Horse Trade.

An old horseman says: "If you want to buy a horse, don't believe your own brother. Take no man's word for it. Your eye is your market. Don't buy a horse in harness. Unhitch him and take everything off but his halter, and lead him around. If he has a corn or is stiff, or has any failing, you can see it. Let him go by himself, and if he walks right into anything, you know he is blind. No matter how clear and bright his eyes are, he can't see any more than a bat. Back him, too.

Some horses show their weaknessess or tricks in that way when they don't in any other. But be as smart as you can, you'll get caught sometimes. Even the expert gets stuck. A horse may look ever so nice and go a great pace, and yet have fits. There isn't a man who could tell it until something happens. Or he may have a weak back. Give him the whip and off he goes for a mile or two, then all of a sudden he stops on the road. After a rest he starts again, but he soon stops for good, and nothing but a derrick can start him.

If a horse stands with his feet spread apart or straddles with his hind legs, there is a weakness in his loins and the kidneys are disordered. Heavy pulling bends the knees. Bluish, milky cast eyes in horses indicate moon blindness or something else. A bad tempered one keeps his ears thrown back; a stumbling horse has blemished knees. When the skin is rough and harsh and does not move easily to the touch, the horse is a heavy eater and digestion bad. Never buy a horse whose breathing organs are at all impaired. Place your ear at the heart, and if a wheezing sound is heard it is an indication of trouble.—Scientific American.

FOR PLAINFIELD'S PROGRESS.

THE WEATHER.

Fair, Decidedly Colder, Northwesterly Winds.

The Daily Press has long felt that a practical sanitary plumber ought to be added to the otherwise admirable Board of Health. Especially since the sewers are to become a feature of Plainfield's municipal progress is there need of such a man on the Board. The wisdom of this suggestion will commend itself to the thoughtful consideration of those who know the value of practical knowledge of mechanical detail in sanitary work.

The new Common Council should make speedy endeavor for the completion of Westervelt avenue. The entrance to that thoroughfare has too long been a lopsided eyesore. If the Councilmen turn their earnest attention to completing the western side of the avenue and making it presentable and passable, it will find the task not such a bugbear as has been painted. Past Councils have shunned the prospective improvement because it is understood that a private property-owner holds a strip of land along the western side of the roadway where the sidewalk ought to be. In that event, why not condemn the land, pay the price, and establish the improvement which has so long been crying to be made?

The Board of Trade has an opportunity to distinguish itself in the matter of connecting Madison avenue and Duer street. Since the postoffice is to be established in the Babcock Building the long-deferred project takes on new importance, and the borough and city ought speedily to have the extension established giving an open highway at this now important commercial centre. The Board of Trade has not developed much activity along the line of its name; and if it wishes to live down its nickname of Board of Bowling it should bestir itself in vital matters of this kind and work with all its power to establish just such public improvements. It has the power; now is the time to exert it. No better thing awaits its advocacy than the Madison avenue extension.

Profits of Physic in England.

Some idea of how much money a successful doctor in England may accumulate in the course of a long life is shown by the sworn statements made to the probate office of the personal property they leave. In the last five years sixty-five doctors have left $3,500,000, an average of £50,000, or $250,000 each. This is in part due to careful investments. Sir William Gull, who was physician in ordinary to the Queen and the Prince of Wales, when he died, at the age of 74, left a fortune of $1,720,000. He once spoke of making over $65,000 in a single year. Seventy-five thousand dollars is probably as much as any doctor or lawyer can possibly make in England, and not more than half a dozen men probably in each profession average more than $50,000 a year. Of 32 doctors in the list whose ages were given, one was 93, eight more were 80 or over, and eleven were between 75 and 80. Sir Andrew Clark, President of the College of Physicians, left over a million, Sir Oscar Clayton $750,000, Dr. Armitage, a blind man, over a million. Dr. Morell Mackenzie, who was 55 when he died, left only $110,000. Seven estates only out of the sixty-five exceeded half a million dollars.

A MODERN PRINCE.

FAIRY-LIKE REVENGE VISITED ON HIS HEAD.

The Romantic Story Ended in America at an Auction Store in a Most Unromantic Way, Owing to the Prince's Gambling and Other Vices.

Oscar Wilde said that the worst part of owing blue china was that one had to live up to it. The Prince Alexandrovitch Galitzine, who came from Paris about three seasons ago, owned one of the finest collections of blue china in existence, but he failed to live up to it, for the entire lot, together with an immense collection of bric-a-brac, bronzes, furniture and rare paintings, was recently sold at auction to satisfy the Prince's formidable array of debts, which, be it said, he has contracted in wooing the god of chance, and incidentally enriching bookmakers at the race tracks.

The Prince comes from a royal Russian family, and for the last few seasons has been courted by society in New York and at Newport. Before he came to the metropolis he had electrified gay Paris by the magnificence of his establishments, the gorgeousness of his carriages and the extravagance of his entertainments.

His feasts rivalled the spreads of the most noted epicures and his guests carried away diamonds and other precious stones as souvenirs of their visits. The Prince, young and handsome and the leader of a gay and titled set, made the fashion.

The news of his wild life and of his extravagant manner of betting, as well as other particular doings which set the city talking, caused some of the royal persons with whom he was a pet to turn from him. The result was that Prince Alexandrovitch shook the dust of the Bois de Bologne from his patent leathered feet and came to New York.

Here his fame had preceded him, and a certain romantic story was told in many swagger boudoirs. It was this: Anna, of Russia, who was a beautiful and capricious queen, once fell in love with one of her courtiers, a noble prince of the realm, whose blood was as blue as many generations of nobility could make it. She was not coy in expressing her attachment, and, although she was married at the time, she delicately expressed to him her wish that they might love forever and aye, and laughed at any restraints which convention had placed upon such a union.

The Prince, whose ideas of love were still young and beautiful, declined the offered favors, and Anna, of Russia, set about to concoct a scheme of revenge.

She hit upon a most fiendish one. The night that the haughty but injudicious Prince refused her last appeal for his love she issued a mandate that on the morrow he be married to the lowest scullion in the royal kitchen. The marriage was performed, and the wretched bridegroom and his wondering spouse were conveyed to an ice palace, where it was supposed they would die during the night.

But the scullion had a heart and soul, despite her low station, and she set to work to preserve the beautiful young Prince. She succeeded so well that on the morrow Anna, of Russia, heard that the couple were still living.

She sent them to Siberia, and there the Prince was seized with a fever, and when he recovered he heard that the cruel Queen was dead, and he and his bride, whom he had learned to love on account of her devotion to him and her heroism, were allowed to return to Russia, where they came into their own again.

The present Prince Galitzine, who fluctuated between Newport, Tuxedo and New York for the last few seasons, was looked upon with favor by chaperones and mammas. The news of his immense wealth and rumors of the magnificent establishment which he intended starting in the city this winter caused him to be courted everywhere, for, of course, a young society Prince would entertain lavishly if he took a house and furnished it with all the priceless art treasures which were in storage waiting for use.

Then the young Prince's gambling losses began to be talked about. The family jewels, which had been given in charge of his banker, were one by one pledged for thousands of dollars, for the jewels are magnificent, and are said to be worth millions.

The final blow came when the furniture, paintings and art treasures were placed in the rooms of a New York auction house for public sale. The last of the Galitzine diamonds had been pawned, and there was nothing left to do, for the fact is the Prince is in pawn. Only a short time ago his sister wrote him from Russia that he could return and claim another vast estate which awaits him there, but when he applied for his passport to the Russian Consul he found himself so much in debt to that personage that he could not leave the country.

Hair Growing on a Horse Blanket.

Mr. William H. Forbes of Spencer Corners, Fulton county, N. Y., is the possessor of a very old horse blanket, which differs from its fellows in that it has a well-defined coat of hair in various stages of development, alive and growing. While possibly of a finer and silkier texture, it is an excellent reproduction of a horse's coat, which the blanket formerly covered.

Mr. Forbes first discovered this peculiarity in October last, when taking it down from the peg in the barn, where it had hung undisturbed during the summer. He was naturally greatly astonished to discover two patches of growing hair, one on either side, where it had been exposed to the light and air. The hair is of a bright bay color and is now fully an inch in length. Probably the most peculiar feature of the affair, however, is the fact that the hair has spread from the two patches until it has entirely covered the blanket with a fine growth, varying in shade and color. It has not only been subjected to a critical inspection by several reputable men, but it has undergone a microscopic test by two prominent physicians, of whom Dr. Henry C. Finch of Broadalbin makes affidavit, before Judge Gardner, "that the hair now growing on the blanket is true hair, and that the roots of the same are alive and in process of development."—Albany Times-Union.

Edison's Time Not Up Yet.

An English reviewer says that "Thomas Alva Edison is, perhaps, the most marvelous and characteristic achievement of the American continent. He has invented more things at 47 than any other man ever invented in a whole lifetime, but he is not used up."

It is interesting to learn that Edison's great grandfather died at 102, his grandfather at 103, and one of his aunts at 108, while his father is alive at 90.

REMOVAL.

Dr. Lighthill begs leave to give notice that he has removed to

NO. 132 CRESCENT AVE.

(a few doors from his former location) where he can be consulted on all chronic diseases of whatever name and nature.

Dr. Lighthill refers with pardonable pride to the success of his practice in Plainfield and submits below a few of the many testimonials which he has received from grateful patients. A mass of similar ones can be seen at his office.

AN ALMOST MIRACULOUS CURE.

The Statement of Mr. Edward Teel, Jr., of Dunellen, N. J.

TO THE PUBLIC:

From a sense of duty I desire to call public attention to the almost miraculous cure which Dr. Lighthill effected in the case of my wife. For eleven years she had been afflicted with piles of an unusual severe and distressing character. She suffered every day of her life the most intense pain, attended with frequent and profuse hemorrhage. This state of things debilitated her entire system until she became a perfect wreck of her former self.

We made every effort to obtain a cure but they all resulted in bitter disappointment, although a number of physicians of excellent reputations for skill in that direction had treated her case. She grew worse and worse all the time, the pain became perfectly unbearable and I felt she could not bear the strain of her condition much longer. In this extremity, a friend of mine, Mr. W. E. Ditts, a resident of Roselle, N. J., a passenger conductor on the New Jersey Central told me that he had been similarly affected, and had been permanently cured by Dr. Lighthill, after other medical skill had failed. He assured me that the doctor would cure my wife, no matter how severe her case may be, and his prediction proved perfectly correct. In spite of her desperate condition, Dr. Lighthill, I am glad to say, has effected a complete and perfect cure in her case, and has given her new life.

Since the cure has been effected she has gained in health and strength and is so improved in appearance that her friends scarcely recognize her. They all consider her cure as almost miraculous, and Dr. Lighthill's praise is heard on every side. Our gratitude to Dr. Lighthill is unbounded and we only hope that other sufferers may be benefited by this publication.

EDWARD TEEL, JR.

A Flattering Testimonial from Colonel John Dietrich, One of Plainfield's Oldest and Best Known Residents.

16 ARLINGTON PLACE, Plainfield, N. J., July 17, 1894.

I am profoundly grateful to Dr. Lighthill for his speedy and radical cure of a most painful malady of over ten years standing with which I was afflicted.

I deem it proper to say to all afflicted to place themselves under the care of this skilful physician and be permanently cured.

I will cheerfully impart any information I possess when called upon.

JOHN DIETRICH.

Mr. Thomas Callahan of No. 214 Richmond street Cured of a Very Distressing Trouble by Dr. Lighthill.

PLAINFIELD, N. J., June 1, 1894.

TO THE PUBLIC:

For some time past I have been greatly distressed with noises in the head. They were all over my head and troubled me constantly; they were loudest at night when everything was quiet, and at such times would often keep me from sleep and disturb my rest. In fact they got to be so bad and distressing that they affected my whole nervous system as well as my health. I did not obtain the least relief until I placed myself under the care of Dr. Lighthill, of No. 132 Crescent avenue, who effected a complete cure in my case in a short time and made me a very happy man.

THOMAS CALLAHAN, 214 Richmond street.

A Card From Mr. T. R VanZandt, of Nos. 304 and 306 Park ave., Plainfield, N. J

I certify with pleasure that Dr. Lighthill has effectually cured me of a most painful case of piles. For some time past I had been subject to its attacks, but the last attack was so exceedingly painful that it completely upset my whole system. The pain extended to my legs and in many other directions, and made me so nervous that I could neither sleep, sit down, lie down or move about without serious discomfort and distress. Such was my condition when I applied to Dr. Lighthill for relief, and I am glad to say that as soon as he took hold of my case, I began to improve, and in a short time found myself completely cured. Dr. Lighthill has also effected a radical and permanent cure in a most terrible case of piles on my cousin, Mr. J. V. Z. Griggs, of Rocky Hill, N. J., whose flattering testimonial is in Dr. Lighthill's possession.

KILLED BY ELECTRICITY.

Result of Seizing a Strongly Charged Wire.

Frank Murphy, 22 years old, was instantly killed at 7 this morning by seizing an electric-light wire on the roof of the train-shed of the Pennsylvania Railroad in Jersey City. No one knew of his presence on the shed or what had happened until his body was seen to drop from the peak of the shed to the tracks, 50 feet below. His hands were badly scorched.

Murphy, who was a galvanizer by trade, was out of work. It is supposed that he had climbed on the shed to ask some men who were repairing the roof about getting employment with them. He must have taken hold by mistake of one of the "feed" wires from the company's electric light plant at Greene street, which run to the peak of the shed.

INCOME TAX TO COME OUT.

Jersey Central Stockholders Lose It in Their Dividends.

The directors of the Jersey Central Railroad Company have decided to deduct from the earnings a sum equal to the amount of the income tax which the holders of stock would have to pay on dividends received by them during the year.

There is good reason for the popularity of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. Davis & Buzard, of West Monterey, Clarion Co., Pa., say: "It has cured people that our physicians could do nothing for; we persuaded them to try a bottle of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy and now they recommend it with the rest of us." 25 and 50c bottles for sale at Reynolds's Pharmacy, Park and North avenues. A PECULIAR MAYOR.

ECCENTRIC ACTS THAT HAVE MADE PINGREE FAMOUS.

His Municipal Circus, with City Officers as Clowns and Members of a Kazoo Band, Organized to Help Out His Potato Patch Scheme.

Mayor Hazen S. Pingree, who has been elected Mayor of Detroit three consecutive times, widely noted for his eccentricities, is to-day a unique political figure in Michigan, says a Detroit correspondent of the Chicago Tribune. Recently he has become nationally prominent as the first mayor to secure a 3-cent street railway fare in the United States. This was accomplished after a three years' war with the Detroit Citizen's Street Railway Company.

Recently the mayor came out in a bread crusade. The bakers were robbing the people; there was a bread trust, he said. He wanted the price of bread reduced to a three-pound loaf for 5 cents. If it wasn't he swore he would start a bakeshop himself.

One day last summer the mayor was driving with Mrs. Pingree on the boulevard. She remarked it was pity so much waste land as adjoined the boulevard should lie idle when there were thousands of poor people suffering for food. The next day the mayor visited real estate men and capitalists, and before night had secured permission to use free over 1,000 acres of land. He appointed an agricultural commission, and within a week had 945 poor families planting potatoes, grains and vegetables.

There were 3,000 applicants from the poor for land, but the season was so late only 410 acres of land were cultivated. There were 14,475 bushels of potatoes alone raised, valued at $14,000.

And it cost the city $3,600. To defray this cost the mayor started a municipal circus. A strolling circus was chartered and grounds rented, Aldermen dressed in outlandish costumes, the City Comptroller made into a ringmaster, the President of the Common Council into a clown and the City Assessors into a kazoo band.

With rakes, shovels, drums, goat teams and all sorts of outlandish rigs, the municipal circus paraded the streets, the City Comptroller at the head on a donkey three feet high. This circus did not pay as well as expected, and the mayor then raised the remainder of the expenses of his poor farm exclusively from city employees by subscription, really an assessment.

The mayor favored a municipal lighting plant. He had a strong local electric lighting company to oppose. It fought him in the Legislature, opposing the passage of an enabling act. Finally the lighting bonds were authorized.

HAZEN S. PINGREE.

Two years ago the mayor secured the passage of an act giving him veto power over the School Board. He vetoed certain school furniture contracts. There was a long delay in the Board of Education over the matter of awarding the contracts. One night recently the mayor appeared before the Board and made a dramatic speech, charging the school inspectors with receiving bribes. One of the inspectors was convicted in the courts, one was acquitted, another attempted to commit suicide, and is soon to be tried, and a fourth left the city, forfeiting his bail bond.

The mayor started a war against the local gas company. He found a clause in the company's charter specifying that the company should sell gas as low as sold in certain other cities. He refused to pay his gas bill, and demanded a rebate in accordance with the price of gas in the cities specified in the company's charter. He publicly advised all gas consumers to do the same, and there were numerous consultations and finally a compromise between the city and company by which a large reduction in the price of gas has been gained, with many minor provisions benefitting the general public.

The mayor wants to build a city hall and county buildings which will last a century. He recently chloroformed his carriage horses, as he did not want to feed them during the winter.

Among other things the mayor has secured a higher taxation of lands, a public bath house at Belle Isle Park, a reduction of the price of ferryboat rides, the placing of an improved girder-grooved rail in the street for street car tracks, an infinitely better system of public sewers and a much better class of pavements.

Patti and Queen Victoria.

Last week for the first time Queen Victoria heard Adelina Patti sing. This will sound strangely to the many who do not know that for many years there has not been the kindliest feelings between Her Majesty and the famous singer. The coolness arose when Patti declined to recognize the Queen's right to command her to appear before her. On that occasion she said:

"There are many queens, but there is only one Patti!"

The trouble, such as it was, must have been fixed up. Patti is now in her fifty-third year, and has, of course, lost much of her charm. For forty years she has been before the public as a professional. Yet the Queen should account herself happy to have heard the wonderful singer even in the decline of her powers. —Chicago Record.

WAS IT UNDESERVED?

The Old Man Had the Sympathy of the Crowd, Anyway.

It was on a train that left Evansville, Ind., for St. Louis, a certain evening not long ago, and the old man in the case had the sympathy of all the passengers aboard the car. Besides the old man mentioned the principal actors in the case were his son and a quart flask of whisky. The old man and his son are both well known in St. Louis, prominent in business and social circles. A few moments after the departure of the train from Evansville the young man fortified himself with a good-sized "swig" from his flask, then starting at one end of the car he went towards the other end, stopping to talk with everyone as he passed them. He knew many of them, but to those with whom he was unacquainted he spoke just the same, offering his flask and taking frequent libations himself. It was easily seen that the old man was his father, and the sympathy of all on the car went out to the poor, white-haired parent, thus forced to witness the disgraceful conduct of his offspring. Finally the young man, becoming too drunk to stand, settled himself in a seat near the front of the car and in a few moments was sound asleep. A sigh of relief was distinctly audible as it escaped from the old man.

One by one the pitying passengers dropped off to sleep, until the only one awake were the father and the Gleaner. The old man waited till he thought all had sought rest, then slowly got up from his seat and, walking through the car, he stood by his slumbering son. For some minutes he gazed at him, breathing heavily the while, and with grief and shame plainly depicted on his countenance. Finally he went to the cooler and got a drink of water, then returned to the side of his boy. He stooped down and noted his countenance closely, then slowly shook his head as he resumed an erect posture, his lips moving slightly as though he was saying to himself that there was no doubt about his son being decidedly and disgracefully drunk.

Then the father's gaze wandered toward the parcel rack above the seat, wherein reposed the son's traveling bag. Carefully reaching it, the old man opened it and took out the flask, now only partly full. He hesitated as he looked first at it, then at the boy, then at the door. The Gleaner's eyes opened wide as the old man seemed about to hurl the flask out of the door of the car. Suddenly withdrawing the cork, the old man threw back his head, lifted the flask to his lips and took a good, long pull. Then he smacked his lips quietly, replaced the flask and valise and returned to his seat.

And in five minutes the Gleaner was the only person in the car awake.—St. Louis Republic.

Marvelous Results.

From a letter written by Rev. J. Gunderman, of Dismondale, Mich., we are permitted to make this extract: "I have no hesitation in recommending Dr. King's New Discovery, as the results were almost marvelous in the case of my wife. While I was pastor of the Baptist Church at Rives Junction she was brought down by pneumonia succeeding la grippe. Terrible paroxysms of coughing would last hours with little interruption and it seemed as if she could not survive them. A friend recommended Dr. King's New Discovery; it was quick in its work and highly satisfactory in results. Sold by L. W. Randolph druggist. Regular size 50c and $1; our price 45c and 90c

ENGLAND WITHDRAWS

The Bluefields Question Is Settled at Last.

Great Britain Gives Up All Claim to a Mosquito Protectorate—The President Sends the Correspondence to the Senate—Contention Pending Since 1850.

Washington, Jan. 4.—The Bluefields' question has at last been settled, after a contention that has extended since the ratification of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty of 1850.

President Cleveland sent the correspondence relating to the trouble to the senate yesterday. It was summarized in a letter by Secretary Gresham, from which it is seen that Great Britain has surrendered all claims to the maintenance of a protectorate over the Mosquito territory.

Secretary Gresham says, after outlining the troubles of the last twelve months:

"From the beginning of the conflicts, which at times were serious, the government has steadily recognized the paramount sovereignty of Nicaragua over the entire reservation, yielding to no pretensions inconsistent with that sovereignty. At no time during the last forty or fifty years has the so-called native Indian government in the strip been real. On the contrary, it has been an alien municipal government administered according to alien methods. Although Americans and American interests have for some time dominated in the strip, this government, while intervening in proper cases for their protection, has constantly disavowed any right of its own or of its citizens to govern the reservation or participate in its political affairs. Whatever right of self-government the Indians enjoyed under the treaty concluded between Great Britain and Nicaragua was to be exercised by themselves and not by aliens in their name. That treaty contemplated the eventual surrender by the Indians of their right to govern themselves and other inhabitants of the strip, and their incorporation into the republic of Nicaragua on the same footing as other citizens of the republic.

"A copy of a convention, concluded on the 20th of November last, is herewith communicated, by which it is declared that the Mosquito Indians, while retaining 'special privileges' in accordance with their 'customs' and 'racial disposition,' have 'agreed wholly to submit to the laws and authorities of Nicaragua for the purpose of forming part of the political and administrative organization.' Great Britain, it is proper to say, has given this government the most positive assurance that she asserts no right of sovereignty or protection over the territory, but, on the contrary, respects the full and paramount sovereignty of the government of Nicaragua."

On Dec. 22 Ambassador Bayard wrote:

"The purport of the statements at the foreign office is an emphatic denial of all reports or rumors indicating any intention or disposition on the part of the British government to mingle in the local political struggles and disorders in Nicaragua and the province of Mosquito.

"Her majesty's government is well pleased with the prospects of having 'Clarence' and his fortunes eliminated from their present responsibility.

"There was the most open expression of satisfaction at the foreign office upon the reported voluntary incorporation of the Indians with the rest of Nicaragua, for it was a consummation devoutly to be wished, and it was glad to be free from the subject."

THE FIGHT HAS BEGUN

Secretary McBryde Issues a Lengthy Manifesto.

Makes a Statement for the Unit d Mine Workers of the Causes Leading to the Trouble with the Knig ts of Labor—Places the Blame on Secretary-Treasurer Hayes.

Columbus, O., Jan. 4.—The war between the United Mine workers and the Knights of Labor is on.

Secretary McBryde, for the Mine workers has issued a lengthy manifesto. He gives a detailed statement of the causes leading up to the trouble. He places the entire blame on Secretary-Treasurer Hayes, and says it is due to his malevolence. Coming down to the recent open rupture, he says:

"On Sep. 7, I forwarded credentials received from Hayes, to McBride Watchorn, Penna and Wilson.

"McBride sent in the credentials as members of L. A. No. 1932.

"On Oct. 20 the gang had matured their plans to keep out the miners, as Sovereign notified us that the charter of L. A. 1932 was revoked; that the board so decided at the Buffalo meeting. I believe this statement to be untrue. If not, why did Sovereign wait from the beginning of September to the latter end of October before he notified this office?

"To the horror of Hayes and company, six miners went to New Orleans, so that, no matter what two were kept out, 135 would still have four delegates upon the floor.

"The miners' delegates went before the committee on credentials in New Orleans, who informed them they could not tell them how many delegates they were entitled to, as Hayes had the books. Hayes was sent for, but refused to give any information. Being asked if there were any charges or protests against the miners the committee said they knew of none. The miners' delegates left their credentials and withdrew.

"Brother Watchorn, in the presence of James Campbell, of the Window Glass workers, demanded from Hayes how long he was going to be kept out of his right to a seat in the general assembly.

"Hayes replied, that right or wrong, Watchorn could not sit in the general assembly if he could prevent it.

"When the general assembly met, they were informed that the committee had not yet passed upon their credentials and requested them to withdraw. The reason soon became manifest. There were fifty-two delegates present twenty-five of whom were favorable to the miners; if the miners' delegates were seated the majority would be against the powers that be.

"There were protests against Shonfaber, Lindholm and Trephagen (three tools of the administration).

"Lindholm has since been expelled by the order of District 24, of Chicago, and Sovereign, although he suspended the district by telegraph, was forced to eat humble pie, restore the district and confirm the expulsion.

"Lindholm was expelled for the same reason that protests were lodged against his seat at New Orleans.

"There can be no question but had the miners' delegates secured seats Lindholm, Trephagen, Shonfaber and a few others would have found themselves where they ought to be—on the outside—and eight delegates, who were kept out, entitled to admission on the inside.

"Justice and fair play demanded this, but then where would Sovereign, Hayes and company be now?

"Keeping out the miners gave them a majority, so they were able to seat their tools and keep out the others.

"The wires were kept going and all the henchmen they could muster were brought to New Orleans. When all had arrived they felt safe in giving the miners a hearing. A resolution giving the officials an hour and the miners ninety minutes was adopted.

"The miners case was so clear that the officers became alarmed, they set up men to talk against time, so as to force a recess, which was taken about 2 o'clock on Sunday morning. Between that time and the meeting of the assembly on Monday every means was adopted to whip the delegates into line. When the vote was taken the miners were excluded. Having kept out the miners upon trumped up charges, the farce must be continued to the end. The board was ordered to re-organize N. T. A. 135. In other words, that the United Mine workers must be disrupted and the curse of two organizations inflicted once more upon the miners. The representatives of the miners were ordered to appear before the board; that had been arguing all week that N. T. A. 135 had no legal existence.

"Every honest man in the assembly was disgusted when they found the order a hot bed of corruption.

"'Sell; Yes, sell everything,' exclaimed the delegates, 'and the sooner all is sold, the sooner the scramble for the funds will end'—and so it was ordered.

"The delegates who were disgusted with the proceedings held a meeting and resolved that they advise that no more tax be paid to Philadelphia and a committee was appointed to take such steps as will re-organize the order on original lines

"We do not ask a single man to leave the order, but we do ask the members to pay no more tax to the gang in Philadelphia and to prepare to attend a convention to elect officers of their choice who will manage the affairs of the order in the interest of the members and not for the personal benefit of Sovereign, Hayes and company.

"To the miners the question is momentous.

"Will they remain solidified as at present or once more inaugurate sectional strife by obeying the mandates of men who never had any interest in their welfare?

"Remember, no man is asked to leave the Knights of Labor, but all are requested to hold fast to their assemblies, advocate the principles of the order and be ready to take part in its reorganization."

Fought to a Draw.

Cleveland, Jan. 4.—The Siddons-Lavack fight was declared a draw.

AT THE CABINET DINNER

Senator Hill a Guest at the White House.

Received with Marked Cordiality by the President, Who Engaged Him for a Few Minutes in Close Conversation—The Senator Declines To Be Interviewed on the Subject.

Washington, Jan. 4.—When the list of names of guests at the president's dinner to the cabinet was given out last evening, the appearance of the name of Senator Hill, of New York, was received with incredulity.

There had been no intimation that the New York senator was to be present, and when it became known about town that Mr. Hill was to be the guest of the president, the fact was at once the subject of the greatest speculation.

There had been rumors that an understanding had been reached between the president and Mr. Hill, but the presence of the latter at the white house was the first tangible evidence that the rumors were probably authentic.

But once during the administration has Mr. Hill before been within the portals of the executive mansion. That time was just after the arrival of Senator Murphy, and the two New York senators appeared at the white house together, but the best information is that they did not see the president at that time.

The president and Mr. Hill met in the general assemblage before the dinner began and their meeting was to every appearance one of extreme cordiality. They remained together for some minutes in a close conversation. Mr. Hill escorted Mrs. Hearst to the dining hall.

Senator Hill declined to discuss his presence at the white house, saying that it was purely a social visit and had no political significance, and consequently he did not feel at liberty to talk on the subject. Nevertheless his attendance will be a mark for political gossip for some days to come. It is understood that Mr. Hill was invited to the last cabinet dinner, but declined.

The full Marine band was in attendance at the dinner, and played many national airs throughout the evening. The table was handsomely decorated. Fifty-four guests were present, including all the cabinet officers, several senators and representatives and others from private life.

The full list was as follows: The president and Mrs. Cleveland, Secretary of State Gresham and Mrs. Gresham, Secretary of the Treasury Carlisle and Mrs. Carlisle, Secretary of War Lamont and Mrs. Lamont, Attorney-General Olney and Mrs. Olney, Postmaster-General Bissell and Mrs. Bissell, Secretary of the Navy Herbert and Miss Herbert, Secretary of the Interior Hoke Smith, Secretary of Agriculture Morton and Miss Morton, Speaker Crisp and Mrs. Crisp, Senator McPherson and Mrs. McPherson, Senator Ransom, Senator Hill, Mrs. Hearst, Senator Manderson and Mrs. Manderson, Senator Bate and Mrs. Bate, Congressman W. L. Wilson, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Tracey, General Schofield and Mrs. Schofield, Mr. and Mrs. Don M. Dickinson, Mrs. Perrine, Dr. Joseph D. Bryant and Mrs. Bryant (New York), Mr. and Mrs. Alex. E. Orr (Brooklyn), Mr. and Mrs. George B. Roberts (Philadelphia), Mrs. William K. Carlisle, Mr. L. Clarke Dayton and Mrs. John G. Milburn.

Will Hold Madagascar Mails.

Washington, Jan. 4.—Capt. Brooks, superintendent of the foreign mail service, has received notification from the international bureau of the universal postal union at Berne, Switzerland, that owing to the war in Madagascar between the French and the natives, mails for the interior of that island will have to be held up on account of danger in delivery.

Treasury Statement for December.

Washington, Jan. 4.—The treasury statement of circulation just issued, shows a decrease during the month of December of $10,657,629, making the amount of money in circulation $1,626,568,622, or $23.52 per capita based on 69,134,000 of population. The net increase of money in the treasury was $10,606,010.

Found Dead in a Snow Bank.

Wilkesbarre, Pa., Jan. 4.—Adam Hill, a prominent young man residing at Eckley, a short distance from Hazleton was found in a snow bank near his home frozen to death. It is thought by some that he met death by violence but as yet there is no evidence to indicate that such is the case.

Will Make Anti-Toxine.

Hartford, Conn., Jan. 4.—The city board of health has appropriated $250 for experiments in anti-toxine. As no more of the article can be had in New York the board of health will make a further appropriation, buy a hose and endeavor to make the diphtheria destroyer.

A DEFAULTER.

Until a week ago I was a trusted employe in an old and conservative house. In receipt of an income sufficiently large co maintain me in comfort, with apparently excellent chances of advancement and regarded as the favored suitor for the hand of one of the best of women. I was envied by many young men in the circle in which I lived. To day, an exile in a strange country, forever separated from the object of my passionate love, bereft of friends and honor, I am the scorn of all, the envy of none.

But a short time ago I should have scoffed at the thought that the love of a pure woman could bring with it a heritage of woe. Now, on the brink of eternity, I have to record, in the few hours that remain to me, how such a love has been the innocent cause of the ruin of three lives, my own the most unworthy Two years ago, at my mother's death, I went to live, at his earnest solicitation, in the home of Mr. Barker, a depositor in the bank for which I worked.

Mr. Barker was a widower of reputed wealth, of fine presence, and who possessed in a high degree the quality of personal magnetism. I had met him first through his business relations with the bank, and from the start he had manifested a lively interest in my welfare. Our tastes were congenial, and the acquaintance developed into an intimacy akin to that between father and son. Therefore I accepted his offer with gratitude, and went to live at his home in a suburb of the city.

It was then that I first met Helen Barker. I shall not attempt to describe the rare beauty and grace that characterized the daughter of my friend. Suffice it to say she realized my ideal of a noble woman, and charmed me equally by her grace of person and intellectual attainments.

Thrown constantly together in home life, it was also looked upon as a matter of course that I should attend her at all social functions, until it came to pass when I considered an evening wasted which was not passed in her companionship, and grew to love the young girl with a passionate devotion that I thought foreign to my nature.

Of all those happy times, the memory of one evening in particular is indelibly stamped on my heart for it signalized at once the culmination of my happiness and the beginning of my undoing. We had been to the theatre, and the play had been well suited to a lover's mood. I remember that we were both more quiet than usual during the walk home. I longing, yet fearing, to speak what was in my heart. She, perhaps, from sympathy, more subdued than was her wont.

It was quite late when we reached the house and, as we entered the dimly lighted hall my companion gave me her hand in good night. The touch of her fingers nerved me with sudden courage.

"Helen," I said, "the play ended happily. How is our story to end?"

She blushed, and withdrawing her hand from mine, ran lightly up stairs. Half way she looked down with a mischievous little laugh.

"I think papa is in his den," she said.

My heart beat wildly as I entered the study, which Mr. Barker called his den. He was still up and had evidently waited for me.

"I thought you would be in for a smoke," he said.

I lighted a cigar with trembling hands then plunged abruply into the subject that agitated me. Mr. Barker listened quietly to my avowal, then said:

"Siegmund, my boy, nothing could have pleased me more. If Helen loves you, the secret wish of my heart will have been gratified."

After that, I think nothing less than a severe shock could have shaken me from the dream of bliss that enthralled me, but I well recollect the foreboding of evil that came over me later.

Mr. Barker and I talked till late and were about to retire, when he said:

"By the by, Siegmund, I drew a check last night after banking hours that may overdraw my account a trifle. If presented in the morning, will you see that it is all right until I can make a deposit?"

"Certainly sir," I replied, but even as I spoke the words a chill struck my heart.

Helen did not appear at breakfast next morning, and though I tarried late over my coffee I was obliged to go to business without having seen her. Still I was extravagantly happy, for with the morning my strange forboding of the night before had left me, and Mr. Barker's request had nearly passed from my mind as I took my accustomed work at the bank. I was rudely brought back to memory, however, by the paying teller at my elbow.

"Salters," he said, "is Mr. Barker's account good for $10,000?"

I started violently, then mechanically turned over the pages of the ledger and pretended to foot up the account.

"The account is O. K.," I said at last.

I thought my voice sounded strange and hollow, and wondered curiously if it was noticed by my fellow clerk. He seemed to see nothing unusual, however, and I watched him with a queer fascination as he passed the piles of crisp bank notes over the counter to a man whom I recognized at the time as a well known stock broker.

All day I waited in suspense for a slip showing a deposit to Mr. Barker's account, but none came, and all the time I knew that in the eyes of the law I was a defaulter for more than $5,000.

Dinner at Barker's was a depressing meal that night. Mr. Barker was distrait and ill at ease, and rarely looked in my direction. I tried hard to appear natural but my attempts to rally the lagging conversation by an assumed gayety was too plainly forced to deceive Helen's quick eyes.

She was plainly puzzled and somewhat worried, and I was thankful when at last Mr. Barker and myself got away to the study on pretense of business.

"Mr. Barker," I said as soon as we were alone, "your account is overdrawn more than $4,000."

He did not reply at once, but sat with his head bowed in his hands, so evidently agitated that my forbodings of ill came with redoubled force.

When he spoke at last it was to tell me of heavy losses sustained in speculation. He had made large purchases of a certain stock which he had every reason to believe would take a marked advance as a result of expected legislation. The legislation had been long delayed and to protect his holdings he had been obliged to cripple his finances until ruin stared him in the face.

He besought me for my love for Helen to conceal the true state of affairs for a time at the bank. The expected legislation could not be long delayed, and then all must come right.

But why prolong the story of my sufferings and shame? What could I do? Confession to the bank officers meant ruin to us all, and the sacrifice of Helen's love even if legal prosecution were escaped. I must hasten on to the conclusion of my story, even as I was then hurried on to the inevitable end by the fatal grip of that first wrong act.

Matters went from bad to worse, and I was soon forced to make false entries in the books to conceal the overdrafts of my accomplice.

Meanwhile I had not dared to declare my love to Helen, and harder than all else to bear were the pained and pleading looks of the girl whom I would have saved from the smallest trouble and for whose sake I had imperilled my very soul.

A year and a half passed and our peculations reached an enormous amount. Mr. Barker had aged ten years in the time and I was pale and haggard.

The bank officers noticed my condition and began to insist upon my taking a long rest. This I resisted and put off by every means in my power, as to leave my post meant discovery and ruin. But the crisis came at last, though not as I had expected. Mr. Barker came to me one day in great agitation. The stock had taken another decline, and unless a margin of $10,000 was put up with his broker before three o'clock his holdings would be sold.

The money was got from the bank in the usual way and at two o'clock Mr. Barker left the bank to take an elevated train downtown. Exactly how it happened no one ever knew, but, according to the station porter, he had noticed an agitated elderly man on the platform just as a train approached.

While walking nervously up and down near the edge of the platform, the man suddenly raised his hands to his head, staggered, and fell directly in front of the engine.

He was dead when taken from beneath the wheels, and when I reached the scene where the body still lay I noticed with a sort of dumb horror that the hands of my watch pointed to one minute past 3 o'clock. The stock had been sold!

What followed seems now like a black and hideous nightmare. The night before the funeral I went to the bank and worked late over the books.

I carefully altered the accounts so that the enormous deficiency in the bank's funds appeared only in the cash account, and I manufactured false statements and placed them among my private papers, showing that I had been a reckless gambler, a profligate and a systematic thief.

That was the least I could do to save the woman I loved from the knowledge of her father's dishonor. On the day of the funeral I asked and obtained leave of absence and took the first steamship for a foreign port.

As I stepped aboard the ship I bought an evening paper and, by force of habit, glanced at the stock quotations.

The stock of which Mr. Barker's holdings had consisted had advanced 30 points that day! Oh, the irony of fate!

And thus my story ends. I reached this land to-day, and my first day of exile shall be my last on earth. The sooner the better—so!

(Copyright, 1894, by Bacheller, Johnson & Bacheller.)

It was a fine summer morning in one of the southern counties of Virginia, and in front of her own little house sat Aunt Belinda Tinsley, paring potatoes. This worthy person was a colored woman, something under forty years of age, light brown in color and comely to look upon. She was neatly dressed, and her surroundings, as well as the amiable and satisfied expression of her countenance, showed that her circumstances were comfortable.

In her earlier days she had lived with white people and had been cook and laundress. Retiring from domestic service, she had married Dick Tinsley, an industrious and worthy blacksmith, who, about two years before this summer morning, had died, leaving his widow a small but well-built house of more pretentious design than any of the negro habitations in the neighborhood, a few acres of land, all paid for, and, as report had it, an income, although there was not unanimity in the neighborhood regarding the amount of this income, nor from what it was derived. But everybody knew that Aunt Belinda, as she was called by her older friends and acquaintances, or Mrs. Tinsley, as some colored people of progressive views now chose to designate her—was a person to be envied, because, so far as outsiders could determine, she had all she wanted.

Aunt Belinda lived alone, and when she had pared four medium-sized potatoes she knew these were enough for a meal, but she was considering whether or not it would be well to boil some more which might be cut up and fried for supper, when, raising her eyes, she saw a man coming along the path which led to her house. At first she did not recognize him, but in a few minutes she saw that he was Moses Lipscomb, a man somewhat younger than herself and a little browner. She had known him all her life as a good-natured, jolly fellow, who, although spasmodically industrious and able to perform surprising feats of labor at hog-killing time, or on other occasions when the work was suitably mixed with excitement, was in general, on account of his aversion to monotonous employment, as needy a man as ever strutted through a cake walk or twanged a banjo.

This morning, as has been said, Aunt Belinda did not at first recognize him. Ordinarily he dressed in garments quite simple and ragged, but now he was attired in grand style. On his head was a high, black silk hat, somwhat battered and rusty, with a broad band of crape around it; he wore a yellow waistcoat, much too large for him, and a blue coat with tarnished brass buttons, some of them missing, which was so small for him that he was obliged to throw out his chest very much to keep his shoulders back in order that he might not split it along its spinal seam. His trousers were of brown linen, clean and very much starched, with the bottom of the legs frayed and worn in such a way that the starched threads hung over his well-blackened boots like icicles over the mouth of a cavern. His collar was high and evidently unpleasant to his jaws. His large cravat had once been all crimson, but portions of it had now faded into brown, and from the outside pocket of his coat projected the corner of a white silk handkerchief.

"'TAIN'T A HUSBAN'," SAID AUNT BELINDA, "IT'S A KEOW."

As the visitor approached he took off his hat, but before he could speak Aunt Belinda sprang to her feet.

"You, Moses Lipscomb!" she cried. "Wot you mean, comin' hyar rigged up like dat? Has you got the imperence to come hyar for de purpos' to pay 'tentions to me?"

A broad smile spread over the visage of the jolly Moses. "Dat's it, 'zactly, Aunt B'linda," said he. "I was kunjurin' what to say to begin wid, an' dar you plumps right in, an' I hain't got no trouble at all. I done come hyar, Aunt B'linda, to pay 'tentions to youse'f wid a view to matermony."

Aunt Belinda sat for a few moments silently gazing at her visitor and then she broke out: "If ever I see a hedgehog in a beaver skin, I'se lookin' at one now. What you mean, playin' dem fool tricks on me? Now, you Moses, you take off dat coh't, wot b'longs to old Uncle Pete, an' was guv him by his mah'ster more'n forty years ago, an' wot Uncle Pete rents out fer ten cents ter any colored man in dis county wot wants ter go a-co'rtin'. Don't yer spose I knows dat coh't? Hain't I mended it more'n twenty times, an' didn't I sew dat little bit o' w'ite silk in de top of de pocket? An' you take off dat high top hat wot yer done borrer from Uncle Abe Binder, an' dat yaller wesh, wot was ole Kunnel Westerman's, an' wot I done wash an' iron till de ole kunnel die. Dem breeches is yous, an' I 'spects dem shoes an' dat 'ar shirt an' neck hank'chef, but you take off all de res' of dem tings 'fore yer says anudder word."

Without hesitation Moses divested himself of hat, coat and waistcoat and laid them down on the grass by the path.

"Is dem dar gole cuff buttons you's?" asked Aunt Belinda, severely.

"No, dey hain't," said Moses, "dey's Buck Simmonses."

"Take dem off!" said Aunt Belinda. "Now den," she continued, when her orders had been obeyed, "you looks like Moses Lipscomb, on'y cleaner, which ain't no fault. You kin sot youse'f down on de grass dar an' say wot you's come ter say," and she seated herself in her chair.

With a grin, Moses sat down on the grass and embraced his knees with his arms. "I hain't got nuthin' ter say, Aunt B'linda, 'cept wot I said afore. I done come pay 'tentions to youse'f wid a view to matermony."

"Wot yer got ter 'sport a wife wid, Moses Lipscomb?" she asked.

"Hain't got nuthin'," answered Moses, his white teeth shining like a rift of light in a cloudy sky. "Bress my soul, Aunt B'linda, ef ev'ry colored man in dis county wait 'til he kin 'sport a wife afore he marry her, whar all de marryin' be?"

To this Aunt Belinda made no reply, but sat gazing, not at her suitor, but over the fields toward the east. Presently she spoke:

"You Moses, you git off dat grass an' take away dem clothes an' den come back arter supper dis evenin' for yo' ahnser. Now git along mighty quick. I hain't got no time to fool wid yer now."

Moses was well acquainted with Aunt Belinda's decision of character, and without making any remonstrances he gathered up the discarded clothes, bade her good morning and departed. Aunt Belinda watched him until he disappeared behind a bit of woodland to the west and then she turned her gaze toward a field in the opposite direction. She had seen, before Moses left, another man approaching through this field.

The newcomer was tall and rather spare of figure, and advanced with long strides, which soon brought him to the house. He was very well dressed, but not after the fashion of Moses. His hat was high, but it bore no untimely crape; his clothes were black, and fitted him very well; his cravat was white, and in his hand he carried a cane with a silver head.

"Mornin', Sister Tinsley," said he; "I hopes I sees yer well?"

"Mornin', Brudder Aaron," said Aunt Belinda; "ef yous got time fer stop, sot youse'f down hyar, and I'll fotch an udder cheer."

He lifted his hand deprecatingly. "Never, Sister Tinsley, never you wait on me. Dat's my part; I waits on you," and briskly stepping inside he brought out a chair.

The newcomer sat down, put his hat on the grass and his cane beside it, and then, leaning slightly forward, clasped his two long black hands between his knees. He was many shades darker than Aunt Belinda, and several years older. His face was long, and rather thin. After a few remarks about the weather and the "craps" he proceeded to business.

"Sister Tinsley," said he, "I knows you is a woman wot ain't got no time to waste, an' I'se a man wid duties an' 'sponsibilities. Now, I comes to de pint widout no scrapin' an' prancin', and I comes here, Sister Tinsley, to ask youse'f ter combine wid me in de wows o' wedlock; in udder words, Sister Tinsley, I asks you to marry me. It's a long time sence you was a widder, Sister Tinsley, and de Bible says 'tain't right fer a man, nor a woman, to live 'lone, 'specially in a house like dis, wid no udder house nearder dan a quarter mile. Now, you kin see for youse'f, Sister Tinsley, dat a man like me, wot's lived in de city an' waited at a hotel an' as—"

"Dat's so," said Aunt Belinda; "'cuse me fer interruptin' you, Brudder Aaron, but you is mistook 'bout me an' de Bible. De holy book don' say nuffin' 'bout women livin' 'lone, only men, an' wot does I want wid anudder husban'? Dar never was a better man dan Dick Tinsley, an' he was an awful trial. Now wot's de good of my havin' anudder man hangin' round hyar? I'se mighty cumf't'ble an' I reckons I'se got ev'ryting in dis worl' dat I wants, 'cept one ting."

"Dat's mighty true!" exclaimed Aaron, "mighty true, Sister Tinsley; dare is one ting wot you wants, and dat is a fust-rate husban'."

"Tain't a husban'," said Aunt Belinda, "it's a keow."

"A keow!" exclaimed Aaron, twisting himself toward her as he spoke. He had not looked at her during his former remarks, directing his quickly-moving eyes over the distant landscape, but now he looked squarely at her, honestly surprised.

"Yes," said Aunt Belinda, "wot I wants is a keow. I'se bin a long time widout one an' I don' wan' to be widout one no longer; so ef I was ever to git anudder husban' I'd git one as would fust guv me a keow. I don' wan' no husban', but ef I cahn't git a keow widout no husban' I'll take him along wid de keow. Dat's de way it stan's, Brudder Aaron."

With his face a little longer than before Aaron resumed his survey of the landscape.

"Wot kin' o' keow you wants, Sister Tinsley?" he asked.

"I don't keer 'bout de kin' nor de breed," said Belinda, "so's she's tol'ble fresh an' giv 'bout three gallon o' milk. Don' wan's no scrawny gallon-keow wid no more butter in de milk dan a bucket o' w'itewash. Has you got a keow, Brudder Aaron?"

Aaron folded his arms, knitted his brows and turned his glance upon the ground.

"When you wan's yer keow?" said he.

"Soon's I kin git her," answered Belinda. "I'se bin a long time widout one, an' I wants ter have some buttermilk dis week."

Suddenly a light flashed into the countenance of the contemplative Aaron and he looked up.

"Did you ever see my littl' place over th' udder side of' de crik, Sister Tinsley?"

The widow shook her head.

Aaron looked satisfied. "Well, den," said he, "I'se got some keows dar, two good keows, one Ald'ney an' one brack an' w'ite. Cahn't say much for de Ald'ney; she ain't fresh. Would a fust-rate brack an' white keow suit yer, Sister Tinsley?"

"Dat 'd suit me tip top," answered Belinda. "When kin yer fotch her?"

"Fotch her enny time," said he; "de sooner de better. Fotch her ter-day."

"All right, Brudder Aaron," said she. "you come 'long wid yer keow dis evenin' 'fore supper; min' dat, 'fore supper, 'cas I wants de milk."

After a few remarks about his intentions and the propriety of the conjugal plan he proposed Aaron departed, asserting that he must lose no time, for the little place he owned was three or four miles away.

Aunt Belinda smiled to herself when he left. "De place you owns!" she said, aloud. "I reckons all de lan' you owns could be got inter a flower pot."

The reader of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly on the blood and mucous surface of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer $100 for any case that it fails to cure.

RETURNED THE REWARD.

A Prize for Virtue Which Was Not Properly Bestowed.

The French nation is almost the only one which has attempted to encourage private virtue by public rewards in the shape of prizes; and there are many Frenchmen who think the system is not successful enough in its results to warrant its continuance. But each year the French academy must, under the requirements by which it is governed, distribute certain of these doubtful "prizes for virtue." The idea of a state reward for brave and noble deeds seems a worthy one, and yet the doing of good deeds depends so much upon interior merit, and to be wholly genuine and admirable, should be so characterized by perfect modesty, that a public prize takes off half the credit, instead of making it the more conspicuous.

It is hard, too, for the academicians to judge accurately and fairly as to the merits of claimants for prizes. When a person comes to them and says: "I demand the prize for noble conduct," they are not much inclined to take the boast as proof. And yet they cannot go about hunting out the good deeds of modest people who say nothing about them.

An actual occurrence some years ago illustrated the difficulty under which the distributors of the prizes labor. They had heard that a certain comedian, Moessard by name, had rescued an aged woman, past seventy, from starvation in a miserable cellar, and had for some time fed, clothed and cared for her.

They made inquiries sufficient to satisfy themselves that the story was true, and then sent Moessard the prize.

Two friends of Moessard, who knew all the circumstances of the affair, happening to meet the man who had been so rewarded, asked him if he had indeed received the prize.

"I have," said Moessard.

"But," they asked, "does not the old woman render you some services in return?"

"She does all she is able to do," said he.

"She sweeps and scrubs your rooms, does she not?"

"Yes."

"And makes your beds?"

"Yes."

"And sometimes runs on errands for you?"

"Frequently, it is true, for, in spite of her seventy-two years, she is sprightly and alert."

"She cooks more or less for you, no doubt?"

"Yes. She cooks roast beef and legs of mutton admirably."

"Indeed! Then it appears that you have made a hard-working house servant, without wages, out of this aged woman, and you are to be rewarded for it with a public prize! Sir, if you accept this honor, you are a scoundrel!"

"So I should be," said Moessard, "if I had sought the reward or known anything about it; and I am at this moment on my way to the academy to return the gift."

In the meantime, some entirely worthy and noble deed was going unrewarded because the doer added modesty to his other merits. It is not to be wondered at that the French academicians begin to doubt the wisdom of a system of rewards which discriminates only too often against the most deserving acts.—Youth's Companion.

THE DAILY PRESS

ESTABLISHED MAY 10, 1887. PLAINFIELD, N. J., SATURDAY, JANUARY 5, 1895. TWO CENTS A COPY. $5 A YEAR.

"COUNT" VAN NESS ARRESTED.

Got $200 on a Policy After He Had Assigned It as Security for a Debt of $700.

"Count" John K. VanNess, 40 years of age, of Plainfield, was a prisoner in the Tombs Court yesterday. The complaint was made by James N. McElhinney, an attorney at 54 East 128th street, who swore that on Nov. 22, 1890, he sued VanNess for $1,840.50 and recovered judgment. VanNess, he said, paid off enough to reduce the amount due to $709 72.

To guarantee the payment of this VanNess assigned to McElhinney an insurance policy for $1,000 on the furniture of his house in Plainfield, which had been burned out a few days previous to Dec. 5, 1893, when the assignment was made. McElhinney was acting for his wife, Jane, in whose name he had recovered the judgment.

The policy of insurance was on the Firemen's Fund Insurance Company of San Francisco. VanNess, McElhinney added, begged him from time to time to delay the presentation of the policy for payment. He complied for a time, but finally decided to write to the company. When he did so he discovered that the claim had been settled by VanNess for $200. He then procured a warrant for VanNess's arrest.

When VanNess was arraigned before Justice McMahon, McElhinney wanted to withdraw the complaint on the prisoner's promise to settle. The Justice refused to allow him to withdraw it, and held VanNess in default of $3,000 bail for examination Jan. 8.

"Nothing so succeesful as success." This old saying seems to hold particularly good in the case of Miss Minnie Lester, who begins an engagement of six nights and three matinees at Music Hall Monday evening in the very funny comedy-drama "Annette the Dancing Girl." Miss Lester has met with unbounded success ever since her initial performance; she has danced herself into the hearts of the people and become a fixed favorite. The reason is not hard to find; a good show at reasonable prices; something that the people can go and see three or four times a week and feel that they are not robbing themselves. This is what the public want and will liberally support when furnished them.

Miss Lester's famous orchestra still remains with her, and will be heard in several new descriptive pieces. The musical programme for Monday evening includes the overture to "William Tell"; "Village Life in the Olden Time"; selections from Harrigan's "Woolen Stocking"; and the descriptive piece, "A Day with the Circus". Those who have not received a lady's ticket, and desire the benefits of one, can obtain them at the box office, where seats should be secured in advance. Prices 10, 20 and 30 cents, positively no higher.

Petition Against Bock.

A petition is being signed against the granting of Charles Bock's application for a license on Somerset street. The reasons for the protest are stated to be the nearness of the location to other barrooms, and because there is no public necessity for another hotel.

—Past President Mrs. Edward Morse of Women's Relief Corps, No. 10, will install the newly-elected officers next Tuesday evening.

Carlton Cornwell, foreman of the Gazette, Middletown, N. J., believes that Chamberlain's Cough Remedy should be in every home. He used it for a cold and it effected a speedy cure. FOR BETTER MORALS.

Borough Legislators Decide to Restrict Amusements.

AFTER THE SALOON ANNEXES.

Billiard Parlors and Bowling Alleys to Be Licensed and Regulated—Borough Council Officially Asks the Court Not to License Bock.

It was 8:20 when Mayor Needham called the North Plainfield Common Council to order last evening, and in answer to the roll call by Clerk Arnold Councilmen Valiant, Howell, Neal, Winckler and Lounsbury responded, Mr. Peck being the only absentee.

The minutes of the December meeting were read and approved.

Justice Crosley's report showed that $56 50 had been collected for fines during the past three months, and the clerk reported $12.50 received from various sources.

Collector Spencer's report was read and showed that the total amount of taxes paid to date was $7,397.82.

Clerk Arnold's statement of the borough finances was:

	Deficit.
Borough	$ 971 32
Fire Department	718.71
Road account	$415.98
Light account	404 05
	$2,094 08
	415 98
Deficit	$1,678.10

The usual batch of monthly bills was presented and referred to the proper committees, and later ordered paid.

In answer to the question as to how many lights were deducted from the electric light bill, on account of poor service, Clerk Arnold said there were sixteen.

The Mayor stated that he had received a communication from residents of Grove street, in which they said that W. A. Wilson had been engaged as a watchman and they would like to have the Council give him permission to make arrests.

Mr. Needham had given him the privileges of a special marshal till last night meeting.

Mr. Lounsbury offered a resolution later making him a special marshal without compensation.

Mr. Valiant did not like the spirit of the action taken by the residents and thought that if they paid their taxes they should be protected.

Mr. Howell thought that they should have better protection, it being very poor at present.

The resolution was adopted by the Council.

Mr. Lounsbury stated that the Sewer Committee had instructed F. A. Dunham to furnish the map, grades, etc., which they were given power to secure, and that they would be ready in two weeks.

Mr. Lounsbury said that he with Mr. Peck had seen Mr. Cooley of the Electric Light Co., and had instructed him in regard to placing the lights ordered on Clinton avenue.

Mr. Howell of the Printing Committee said that he had purchased an atlas of F. A. Dunham as he was given power to do.

Mr. Lounsbury offered an ordinance which provides for the licensing and regulating of bowling alleys and billiard saloons in the borough.

He had seen Borough Counsel Reed and was informed that it was perfectly legal and proper. It provides that they have to pay a license fee to be decided upon and that the places have to be closed from 11 each night till 6 the next morning, and from the same hour Saturday night till the same hour Monday morning. Violations of the ordinance incur a fine of $50 for each offense or 10 days in jail or both. It was referred to the Laws and Ordinance Committee.

Mr. Valiant offered resolutions that a warrant be drawn for $53 in favor of pay roll, also that warrants for the $1,500 note with interest due Jan. 12, 1895, and the $1,000 note with interest due Jan. 15, 1895, be drawn for H. N. Spencer and charged to road account.

Mr. Lounsbury offered a similar resolution in regard to the $1,000 note with interest due Jan. 12, the same to be charged to Borough account.

A recess of ten minutes was then taken. During the latter, H. N. Spencer presented a handsome map of Plainfield and North Plainfield to the Council on behalf of ex-Mayor William Saunders. It was made by F. A. Dunham.

When business was resumed Mr. Valiant moved that the hearty thanks of Council be extended to Mr. Saunders for his gift, which was unanimously given.

Mr. Howell offered a resolution that a warrant be drawn for H. N. Spencer for the $1,000 note with interest due Jan. 15, 1895 and charged to light account. It was adopted.

Mr. Valiant offered a resolution that the sense of the Council be expressed to the Judges of the Court of Common Pleas, Somerville, against licensing a saloon on Somerset street to be opened by Charles Bock. Mr. Neal stated that it was not a question of temperance, but that Council was charged with protecting the borough. Mr. Howell was in favor of it, individually, but not officially, and Mr. Lounsbury stated that the saloon would add additional duties to the marshals and councilmen, but while he was in favor of the resolution personally he would not vote for it as an official paper. Mr. Valiant had heard where such things had been done before, and as he thought the saloon would be a superlative nuisance, he would vote for the resolution. Mr. Winckler was of the same opinion.

The Mayor spoke at length on the subject and heartily favored the action proposed. He thought the borough and city would be troubled considerable by the saloon, it being on the border line.

Mr. Neal said that he had been informed on good authority that the Somerville Court would look with favor on an official document from the Council.

Mr. Howell thought the hour of closing the saloons should be changed so people could not come from Plainfield at a late hour of the night and fill up on borough liquor.

The resolution was adopted, Mr. Lounsbury alone voting no.

The subject of cleaning sidewalks of snow and ice was brought up by Mr. Lounsbury, who asked if something could not be done to make it practical. It was thought that the borough would be held liable for accidents resulting therefrom. After a long discussion in which compliments were exchanged such as one of the councilmen thought the chairman of the Street Committee should clean the walks, it was said that there was no ordinance compelling a property-owner to clean his walk, and owing to the financial embarrassment of the borough they could do nothing in the matter.

A communication from Engine Co., No. 1, stated that Rudolph Spiegel and Frank Kesselring had been elected members of the company and asked that they be confirmed. It was referred to the proper committee.

On motion of Mr. Howell Council adjourned at 9:20.

Marvelous Results.

From a letter written by Rev. J. Gunderman, of Diamondale, Mich., we are permitted to make this extract: 'I have no hesitation in recommending Dr. King's New Discovery, as the results were almost marvelous in the case of my wife. While I was pastor of the Baptist Church at Rives Junction she was brought down by pneumonia succeeding la grippe. Terrible paroxysms of coughing would last hours with little interruption and it seemed as if she could not survive them. A friend recommended Dr. King's New Discovery; it was quick in its work and highly satisfactory in results. Sold by L. W. Randolph druggist. Regular size 50c and $1; our price 45c and 90c

A LITTLE GIRL'S DEATH.

JOSIE COOK KILLED BY A ROYAL BLUE TRAIN.

The Little Girl Heedlessly Stepped in Front of a Flying Express and Was Frightfully Mangled.

Little Josie Cook, the 11-year-old daughter of Mrs Ida Cook who lives in Philadelphia, met with a terrible death yesterday afternoon, being struck by the west-bound Royal Blue flyer at 4:45.

Josie and her cousin, Mabel Ayers, who is a few years her senior, were making a short cut across the Central tracks going toward Lafayette place and taking the path back of Cadmus's mill. They were obliged to wait for the passage of an east-bound coal train the noise of which was such that they did not hear the roar of the flyer which was going at 60 miles an hour to make up lost time.

Little Josie started to run to the other side and before Mabel's cry of warning could be heard.

Her little body was hurled through the air with frightful force and struck between the tracks. Horror-stricken Mabel not realizing the awful truth ran to the Ayers home on Spooner avenue and told them Josie was hurt by the train.

The anxious grandparents hurried at once to the track, first, however, sending Mabel to Muhlenberg Hospital nearby for a stretcher. Josie did not live until the stretcher arrived. A sheet mercifully hid the mutilated little body from view, and the grief-stricken relatives notified the undertaker.

Little Josie was a great favorite in Hope Chapel Sunday-school, where she appeared at their Christmas entertainment as an angel. Her mother in Philadelphia was at once notified, and arrived at a late hour last night.

The sad affair has cast a gloom over the entire neighborhood. The engineer claims he did not see the accident and the train sped on. Great indignation is expressed at the fact that the little body lay where it fell until the arrival of the undertaker about 8. Friends who attempted to move the remains to shelter were threatened with arrest if they touched the body. Officer McCue had charge of the body.

COUNCIL GOES OUT.

Hears the Balance of Reports and Winds up Affairs.

ITS RECORD A SHINING MARK.

During the Year by Prudent Management the City's Needs Have Been Thoroughly Filled, and the Accounts Are Closed With Balances in the Treasury—Fires, Arrests and Other Statistics, Fully Detailed.

The Plainfield Common Council for 1894 held its final session last night. All were present but Councilman Frazee.

A petition was received from citizens asking for a fire-alarm box at Watchung and Woodland avenues or Watchung and Belvidere avenues, as the nearest box to the petitioners was nearly half a mile away. This was filed with the City Clerk for reference to the next Council.

Andrew J. Gavett, Constructing Engineer, reported 17,411 feet of sewer laid, at a cost of $12 248 71. The amount of underdrain laid was 7,852 feet. He and the Sewer Committee recommended the early continuance of the work under additional contracts. The report was filed.

Corporation Counsel Craig A. Marsh reported that George R. Rockfellow was entitled to the office of constable.

Councilman Ginna reported that the special committee had conferred with the Board of Health in regard to sanitary plumbing and had framed an ordinance which was to be presented to the new Council. The committee was dissolved.

The Alms Committee report showed that 68 persons had received aid during the year. The cost had been less than the previous year, which was attributed to the greater activity of church and other charitable societies and the careful supervision of all cases.

The annual report of the Finance Committee and the balance sheet of the year were submitted, and ordered published in the official papers. They are published in full in this issue of The Daily Press, and show a balance to the credit of the departments and a highly gratifying condition of the municipal finances.

Chairman Dumont explained that the general fund was about $8,000 better off than a year ago, owing to the collection of $4,000 more of delinquent taxes than in previous years and economy in expenditure and saving money on the several appropriations.

The proposed rules and regulations of the fire department being still incomplete, they were referred back to the Board of Engineers.

All pending applications for fire-alarm boxes were referred to the incoming Council.

Chief Engineer T. O. Doane in his annual report stated the number of firemen to be as follows: 153 members, 1 chief, 2 assistant engineers, 4 foremen, 8 assistant foremen, 1 engineer of steamer, 5 drivers and 114 privates. Two members had been expelled, 2 resigned, 1 died and 1 new member was elected. He recommended the addition of a tillerman to the staff, as often the truck was seriously delayed awaiting the arrival of someone competent to manage the tiller. During the year 16 lengths of hose had burst, and the hose was in the following condition: 5,150 feet total; 2,500 in good condition; 650 fair; 2,000 poor. Engine-house at 208-212 West Second street was in good order, having been remodeled and repaired at an expense of $725; it might need a new tin roof soon. The enginehouse at 147-153 East Second street was new and in splendid condition. The fires of the year were as follows: Total alarms 60, an increase of 25 over the previous year; cause unknown, 13; defective flue, 13; defective stovepipe, 1; burning paper, 1; boiler, 2; lightning, 1; celluloid comb, 1; wad from cannon, 1; overheated stove, 5; acid, 1; electric light wire, 1; oily rags, 1; out of town, 3; lamp explosion, 4; false alarms, 4; box of ashes, 2; tree afire, 1; sparks from locomotive, 2; children and matches, 2; brush heap, 1. Though this is a greater number of fires than in any previous year since the city acquired the department, the losses were comparatively small, because of the first-class equipment and the quick responses to alarms. It was hard to tell at a fire which company the men were members of, as they all worked together to attain one end, to put out the fire and put it out quick. Chief Doane reported 231 hydrants, 21 having been added during the year. The average hydrant pressure was seventy-four pounds, but at Netherwood Heights the pressure was only about 40 lbs. The Chief recommended placing an alarm gong at the pumping station, and that No. 2's horse be exchanged for a more satisfactory one. He renewed his previous recommendation for a chemical engine, and pointed out that during the year 23 fires had been put out by chemical extinguishers alone. As Fire Marshal Mr. Doane had made 400 inspections of buildings, cellars and ash-heaps, and had removed many causes for danger. Fire escapes were needed on several buildings, and an ordinance requiring them should be passed. Fire apparatus should be established in the West End, and the reduction in insurance rates would more than offset the increase in taxes. The loss during the year on buildings was $3,015 20, covered by insurance of $79 915; loss on contents, $6,674; insurance, $42,-900; total amount of insurance involved, $122,815; collected, $9 689 20. Uninsured property to the extent of $18,000 had been saved during the year—one building of $10,000, and about $8,000 of furniture chiefly owned by poor families whose little all it was. The Chief thanked Manager Charles W. Runyon of the New York and New Jersey Telephone Company for his kind and valuable advice and help on the fire alarm system, the Council for providing such an admirable equipment, and the Corporation Counsel for his valuable legal advice. He urged better restriction of the stringing of wires on poles.

Chief of Police George W. Grant reported the total number of police as 38, 8 regulars and 30 specials, one regular having resigned because of ill health. Their duties, he remarks, have been performed in a worthy manner. The total number of arrests was 529: 505 white, 24 colored. Of these 493 were men, 36 women. They are classified as follows: For being drunk and disorderly, 60; drunkenness, 76; disorderly conduct, 202; larceny, 15; violation of hack ordinance, 6; violation of street ordinance, 1; violation of liquor ordinance, 7; violation of bicycle ordinance, 30; gambling, 1; disorderly house, 5; fast driving, 3; peddler's license, 15; riding on trains, 69; assault, 3; non-support, 2; vagrancy, 2; contempt of court, 1; fugitive from justice, 1; miscellaneous, 31. Of these prisoners, 193 were fined, 170 had sentence suspended, 93 were sent to the county jail for periods ranging from 10 to 60 days, 9 were held for the grand jury, 35 were discharged, 1 was sentenced to State Prison, 18 were held to keep the peace, 4 cases were appealed, 1 was held on requisition papers, and five are unsettled.

The report of Street Commissioner Robert A. Meeker, which was published in full in The Daily Press of yesterday, was presented, and not read because it had already been read in the paper. Mr. Dumont criticized the fact of publication being made before the report was submitted to the Council. Mr. Fisk laughed and said it was a case of the reporters getting ahead of the Council.

Mr. Erickson reported that the last of the old fire bonds had been paid, and there was no further outstanding indebtedness. The trust mortgage was ordered cancelled.

After a recess in which the Clerk wrote his minutes of the session, they were adopted, and the Council adjourned. At the closing moment Mr. Ginna put through a vote of thanks to President See for his courteous and gratifying administration of the year, and to the Clerk for his satisfactory work. Mr. See in turn thanked the Councilmen for their labors, and congratulated the city on the success and progress of the year. He spoke of the immense amount of business done in committee, and complimented the committees on their work.

THE WORK OF CONGRESS

Senator Lodge Creates a Lively Discussion.

Asks the President for Information Regarding the Withdrawal of Vessels of War from Hawaii Mr Morgan Defends the Nicaragua Canal Bill—Work in the House.

Washington, Jan. 5.—There was a very lively and interesting discussion in the senate over Senator Lodge's (rep., Mass.) resolution calling on the president for information as to the withdrawal of American vessels of war from the Hawaiian islands. All of the republican senators who participated in the discussion—Lodge, Sherman (O.), Hawley (Conn.), Hale (Me.), Aldrich (R. I.), and Teller (Col.),—favored the adoption of the resolution while the democratic senators who spoke—Butler (S. C.), Morgan (Ala.), and Gray (Del.),—argued in favor of its reference to the committee on foreign relations.

One democratic senator—Call, of Florida—opposed the reference and favored the resolution. The morning hour expired before any vote was taken; and the resolution lost its place on the table, and went to the calendar, where it will be heard of no more.

Then Mr. Morgan (dem., Ala.) finished his speech in support of the Nicaragua canal bill, defending it against the assaults made upon it by Mr. Turpie (dem., Ind.), in his three days speech. No action was taken, and the bill still remains the unfinished business.

The military academy appropriation bill was passed, with a few amendments, occupying no more time than was necessary for the clerk to read it. The pension appropriation bill was taken up but went over without final action. The senate then adjourned till Monday.

The debate on the currency bill in the house of representatives was in some respects the most notable and interesting that has occurred. The speeches of Messrs. Dingley, of Maine, and Hepburn, of Iowa, were significant in that they were taken to express the purpose of the republican majority in the next congress to proceed at once, upon its assemblage, to the preparation of a revenue measure which will, in their opinion, provide enough money to meet the expenditures of the government. Nothing short of that, according to their statements, will be sufficient to remedy or remove the evils from which the treasury and the whole country are suffering. Mr. Hepburn would also go further and proceed to legislate for a more general use and coinage of silver, but Mr. Dingley was silent on that point.

Representative Hendrix, of New York, also made a notable speech. He said the bill would be a failure as far as the purpose which it sought to effect were concerned. He approved the principle contained in the bill, advocated by the president and secretary of the treasury, of taking the government out of the banking business and pleaded with the majority to supplement its magnificent record in taking the government out of the silver business, by enacting that principle into law before adjournment.

Other speeches were made by Messrs. Caruth (dem., Ky.), and Gresham (dem., Tex.), in favor of the bill. Mr. Sperry (dem., Conn.) gave notice of a substitute he intended to offer, and Mr. Walker (rep., Mass.) presented two additional sections to his substitute, requiring the payment of customs dues in part in gold for a certain period, and authorizing the secretary of the treasury to sell 3 per cent. bonds to cover deficiencies in the treasury and to maintain the gold reserve.

ROASTED IN MIDAIR.

Horrible Death of Frank Murphy in the Jersey City Depot.

Jersey City, Jan. 5.—Frank Murphy, aged 27, of Henderson street, this city, met a horrible death in the Pennsylvania railroad depot. Murphy was a tinsmith, in search of work, and started to climb an iron ladder leading from ground to roof to see the foreman.

When about forty feet up he lost his footing and threw out his hands to save himself. In doing so he grasped a "live" electric light wire with both hands and held on for several moments. Then he fell to the ground. He was dead when the employes reached his side. His hands were smoking and the flesh was burned to the bone. The body was removed to the morgue. Murphy leaves a widow and several children in destitute circumstances.

Tom Vickers, a brother of Peter, three of Peter's children, and four children of another colored man, making eight in all, were burned to death. It is believed the fire was of incendiary origin.

Washington, Jan. 5.—The following is the full text of the bill introduced by Mr. Sperry, of Connecticut, as a substitute for the Carlisle banking bill:

Section 1.—That the secretary of the treasury is hereby authorized to issue in a sum or sums not exceeding in the aggregate all the United States notes now outstanding, including all legal tender notes issued under the provisions of the acts of February 25, 1862, and July 11, 1862, and March 3, 1863, and all treasury notes issued under the provisions of the act of July 14, 1890, coupon or registered bonds of the United States, at the option of the purchasers thereof, payable in gold coin of the United States of the present standard value, bearing interest payable quarterly, in such coin, at the rate of 3 per cent. per annum.

Said bonds shall be of the denominations of $10, $50, $100, $200, $500, $1,000 or $10,000, at the option of the purchasers thereof, and shall be in such form as the secretary shall prescribe; said bonds shall be payable at the option of the United States ten years from the date of their issue, and shall be due and payable thirty years from the date of their issue, and all of said bonds and the interest thereon shall be exempt from the payment of all taxes and duties of the United States, as well as from taxation in any form by or under state, municipal or local authority, and the said bonds shall have set forth and expressed upon their face the above specified conditions, and shall, with their coupons, be made payable at the treasury of the United States. And a sum necessary to pay the expense of preparing, issuing, advertising, and disposing of said bonds is hereby appropriated out of any moneys in the treasury of the United States, not otherwise appropriated.

Section 2.—That from and after the passage of this act all United States legal tender notes issued under the provisions of the acts of February 25, 1862, July 11, 1862, and March 3, 1863, and all treasury notes issued under the provisions of the act of July 14, 1890, which shall be redeemed in gold coin at the treasury of the United States shall be canceled and destroyed and shall not again be reissued, and the secretary of the treasury is hereby authorized and required to sell and dispose of at public or private sales, within his discretion, any of the bonds issued under this act, at not less than their par value for gold, coin, to an amount equal to the amount of all such United States notes and treasury notes so redeemed, canceled or destroyed.

Section 3.—That whenever the amount of gold coin and gold bullion in the treasury of the United States, which is not held for the redemption of gold certificates outstanding falls below the amount of $100,000,000, the secretary of the treasury is hereby authorized and empowered to sell and dispose of, at public or private sale, within his discretion, any of the bonds issued under this act, at not less than their par value in gold coin, to such an amount as shall be necessary to restore the amount of gold coin and gold bullion in the treasury of the United States, which is not held for the redemption of gold certificates outstanding to the amount of $100,000,000.

Section 4.—That the secretary of the treasury is hereby authorized, within his discretion, to use from time to time any surplus revenue of the United States to redeem United States legal tender notes issued under the provisions of the acts of February 25, 1862, July 11, 1862, and March 3, 1863, and treasury notes issued under the provisions of the act of July 14, 1890, and said notes, when so redeemed shall be canceled and destroyed, and shall not again be reissued.

Section 5.—That the secretary of the treasury is hereby authorized, within his discretion, to sell and dispose of any of the bonds issued under the provisions of this act, at public or private sale, at not less than their par value, for gold coin, to such amount or amounts as he may deem necessary and to apply the proceeds of the bonds so sold to the redemption of any United States legal tender notes issued under the provisions of the acts of February 25, 1862, July 11, 1862, and March 3, 1863, or treasury notes issued under the provisions of the act of July 14, 1890, which may be received into the treasury of the United States, in payment of duties on imports, internal revenue taxes, or any other dues to the United States, and all such United States or treasury notes so redeemed shall be canceled and destroyed, and shall not again be reissued.

SUSTAINS THE ROAD'S CLAIM

Judge Shumway Hands Down an Important and Interesting Decision.

New Haven, Conn., Jan. 5.—An interesting and important decision has just been rendered by Judge Shumway, of the superior court.

In 1893 the railroad commissioners ordered the highway over the railroad east of the Darien, (Conn.) station to be closed and provided that travel should be carried under the tracks of the railroad at a point west of the station. After the work had been completed some property owners sought to establish a new highway on the line of the old and discontinued one.

After this case had been in court for three months the railroad became a party to the complaint, and filed a plea to the jurisdiction, setting up that the court had no power to authorize the layout of a new highway because the question of public convenience became res adjudicata under the order of the commissioners and because the proposed new layout would occupy a tract of land which was then used for freight yard, station and approaches.

The judge in his decision sustains the road's claim and dismisses the complaint. This decision is of importance, because it shows that when the commissioners discontinue a highway, and no appeal is taken to the superior court by aggrieved parties, neither the town nor the superior court can thereafter lay out a highway over or under the location abandoned.

BURNS' FAREWELL TALK.

Clarendon Hall Packed with a Crowd of Representative Labor Men.

New York, Jan. 5.—Clarendon hall was packed last evening with a crowd of representative labor men who had gathered to render a farewell reception to John Burns, and hear the great English leader's last public utterances in this country.

Mr. Burns, in speaking of monopoly control, said that it was responsible for the death of one person a day in Chicago alone, owing to grade crossings. Great Britain, with its entire population, getting only 100 more deaths in a year from a similar source. American brakemen are compelled to take greater risks with their lives than those of any other country, because monopoly cannot be compelled to adopt proper couplings apparatus as in England and elsewhere.

"We are living in an industrial hell," he said, "in some respects. The rate of wages has decreased 35 per cent. since 1891-92, and is gradually coming down to lowest living cost of lowest grade of labor. Immigrants should all be compelled to join trades unions, or capital will force wages down to their standard of living."

THE DEBS CONSPIRACY CASE.

Motion to Quash Indictments Up Before Judge Grosscup.

Chicago, Jan. 5.—The motion to quash the indictments for conspiracy agaist Eugene V. Debs and the other directors of the American Railway union, besides sixty others, who are accused of stopping the mails and interfering with inter-state commerce, were brought up before Judge Grosscup in the United States court. There were twenty indictments in all.

Attorney T. A. Harper, in opening for the defndants, claimed that all the indictments should be quashed because the word "feloniously" did not appear in any of them; also because it had been held by Justice Harlan and others that men had a right to combine or conspire to strike. He also thought the indictments not specific enough.

Mr. Milchrist spoke for the government. The only defendant present was Director William Burns.

SWINDLED OUT OF $5,000.

The "Gold" Brick Game Successfully Worked in Virginia.

Richmond, Va., Jan. 5.—A. W. Withers of Gloucester county, was swindled out of $5,000 in money here by two men, claiming to be John Williams, of Arizona, and Thomas H. Parker, an assayer, of the United States mint, at Philadelphia. The men worked a bunco game upon Withers to get him to Richmond, and the cash was paid to Williams by Withers upon a couple of bricks of "gold" which after a test by a jeweler proved to be brass.

Both the men escaped and all that they left behind them was a couple of valises containing a mask and a wig and a lot of circulars exposing a gold brick swindle. A part of the scheme was that Williams claimed to be in Virginia looking for an uncle named Alfred Withers, which appellation his victim bears.

Old Wages Restored.

North Adams, Mass., Jan. 5.—The North Adams Manufacturing company has announced a restoration of the 5 per cent. cut made in wages of their employes during the business depression. The cut originally was 10 per cent., but some time ago the help struck for their old wages. Five per cent. was restored at that time, and the company said that when times justified it, the other 5 per cent. would be paid to their employes.

RAPIDLY BREAKING DOWN

MRS. S. BATES TELLS THE STORY OF HER SUFFERINGS.

How She Was Cured By Munyon's Little Pellets After Physicians Had Failed.

Mrs. S. Bates, of Cecil, N. J., adds her testimony to that of the thousands who have been saved from a life of suffering by Munyon's Remedies. She said: "I had suffered greatly with indigestion and stomach trouble. Everything I ate distressed me, I was nervous and fretful and rapidly breaking down. Physicians had failed to help me, nor did any of the many remedies I took relieve me until I began using Munyon's Dyspepsia Cure. The result was astonishing. After taking but three doses I felt greatly improved, and after taking one 25c. bottle I was entirely cured."

Munyon's Stomach and Dyspepsia Cure cures all forms of indigestion and stomach troubles such as constipation, rising of food, distress after eating, bloating of the stomach, palpitation of the heart, shortness of breath and all affections of the heart caused by indigestion. It soothes, heals and invigorates stomachs that have been weakened by over-eating, or where the lining of the stomach has been impaired by physic and injurious medicines. Price 25 cents.

Munyon's Homoeopathic Home Remedy Company, of Philadelphia, put up specifics for nearly every disease, which are sold by all druggists, mostly for 25 cents a bottle.

HOW SMUGGLERS WORK.

The Canadian Border Infested by Free Traders.

Smugglers? Thousands of them. They swarm along the Canadian border from ocean to ocean. It may be the track of a solitary sledge on the St. Lawrence, or a fishing schooner beating into a quiet bay where there are no fish; or, if you like, a well dressed woman hiding a fortune in gems in the rug with which she protects a silk pug from the cold as the train nears the frontier—the methods change from time to time, for in novelty ofttimes there is safety, but the smugglers, like the poor, are with us always.

The fact now is just what it has been ever since there has been population enough on both sides of the border to make the evasion of the tariff a paying business for adventurous spirits—Uncle Sam cannot police his long line of border fence, nor indeed do any more than make a poor bluff at it, and trust to the moral sense of the people for the rest. And when the fence isn't watched the almighty dollar crowds the moral sense of the people to the wall, and there's an end to it. Give the frontiersman a chance to smuggle and he will arrange the matter with his conscience.

And how do smugglers smuggle? Well I put that question a day or two ago to A. L. Drummond, who used to be the head of the United States Secret Service in New York, and who did sterling work against the opium carriers years ago.

"Just take for example," Detective Drummond said, "the tricks devised by the men who smuggle opium over the border from Canada. The duty has been changed now, I suppose, but in my day a smuggler could save $10 a pound on the drug. Well, what do they do? You know what an or inary carpenter's tool box looks like. They will take such a box and fix it with little panels of drawers, which only a minute inspection will disclose, or place a false bottom in it, or a false top, leaving room to slip in the thin, oblong cakes, and then coolly walk over the bridge or border, after the manner of an honest workman."

But methods, like smugglers, are innumerable, and vary with the goods to be carried and the station and dress of the person who carries them.

PUT UP ON THE MINISTER.

If He Hadn't Had the Tobacco Habit 'Twouldn't have Happened.

The clerks in the office were always on the alert to play some joke on Sniffles, the junior bookkeeper, and the strangest part of it was that they always managed to catch him unawares.

The other day the clerks loaded a tempting looking cigar with an apparently harmless explosive. It was graciously offered to Sniffles, who accepted it with profuse thanks, saying he would smoke it after dinner that evening.

It so happened that this very evening Sniffles' wife, who was a very religious woman, had invited the minister to dinner. The minister loved good cigars, and Sniffles, knowing this, proudly asked him to have a cigar and unselfishly and innocently handed him the one which he had received that afternoon from the clerks in the office.

Sniffles' wife was pleased at her husband's generosity to the minister and looked on with pleasure as the minister contentedly lighted the cigar.

Suddenly there was a report, the minister fairly howled with terror, and the air was filled with smoke. Sniffles and his wife were surprised and shocked beyond expression.

"Heavens!" muttered Sniffles, "that's the work of those d——n clerks again."

The minister's face was red with rage. Half of his beautiful side whiskers had been singed and he looked a sight. He gave one terrible glance at Sniffles, then took his hat and departed.

"Never shall I enter this house again," he said with great emotion as he shut the door.

That night there was war in Sniffles' house. His wife accused him of having loaded the cigar on purpose in order to drive the minister away. All his explanations were in vain, and now Sniffles and his wife have ceased to speak.

The clerks are still wondering whether Sniffles smoked that cigar, but he is so silent about the matter that they can't get anything out of him.

THE SUN'S FASHIONS.

THE EVER UP-TO-DATE FRILLS OF FEMININE DRESS.

The Balloon Sleeve Sags and Hovers About the Elbow. Artificial Flowers a Feature of Evening Dress, to the Chagrin of the Florist.

In this festive season, when gayety of every description is at high tide and variety in dress is such a necessity to the fashionable woman, the weird fancies and varied elegancies of fashion are developed with great effect. It would seem that all the colors of the rainbow had been reassembled, with all their modern variations, and formed into new and heretofore unknown combinations.

Despite fashion's reputation for erratic ways and rapidly changing moods, she is still faithful to the style of bodice which is made of a different material and color from those of the skirt. It may be some satisfaction for those to whom a fancy waist is a necessity to extend the usefulness of one black silk skirt, to know that the latest evening dresses from Felix are made with waists entirely different from the skirt.

One style of a low bodice, made to wear with any kind of a skirt with which it will harmonize, is of pink satin, covered with peach-colored chiffon, full and overhanging directly in front, and it is trimmed at the neck with crossed folds of mauve, white and pink chiffon, with mauve rosettes interspersed. The incongruous combination of fur, flowers, velvet, and gauzy chiffon in one evening gown is not unusual, and it is very effective when arranged artistically.

Artificial flowers in some bright color are one of the features of evening dresses, especially those worn by young ladies, and are arranged high on the left side of the bodice.

Embroidered silks are much used for dressy gowns, and, like the cloth and chiffon, are made up over plain cloth in contrasting color. It can be used for the waist alone, for the skirt and sleeves, or the bodice and sleeves, just as fancy dictates. Felix dresses of plain heavy silk are sometimes trimmed up the seams of the skirt with embroidery, jet or chenille galoon.

Evening gowns are not the only dresses in demand for the house party outfit, for there must be day gowns, both dressy and plain, and the inevitable tailor-made dress, which, like the brook, seems likely to go on forever. It may vary in cut and decoration, but it is always the dress for real service.

A pretty bodice, for informal dinners and card parties, is made of black velvet, cut plain in the back with one seam in the middle and plain in front. White chiffon, accordeon plaited, forms the wide vest over white satin, which is cut out in the neck above the jet band, which also trims the collar, sleeves and belt. A frill of guipure lace falls over the sleeves and is caught up at each side of the bust with a rosette of satin ribbon. Another effective bodice is made of white moire, with a yoke and side pieces of black satin covered with jet passementerie very open in pattern. The back is like the front, the sleeves of black satin and the collar of white silk muslin.

One of the decided manifestations of fashion is shown in this tendency of the sleeve to droop so that the fullest part shall be near the elbow. One way to accomplish this is by the use of inch-wide bands of fur, velvet or jet, beginning at the shoulder and extending down on the sleeve half way to the elbow, on the top confining the fulness, and graduated so that the longest one is on the inside seam.—New York Sun.

COREA'S FIRST LADY.

She Has Absolute Power in Her Own Apartments and Can Punish by Death.

On the day you make your call you are taken to the palace on a chair inside of a large box and accompanied by an escort and usually a servant. You pass into the palace grounds, where an official receives you and conducts you to the particular set of buildings in which royalty is making a home.

You pass through passageways into a courtyard, where you leave your escort behind, as well as the palace official, and are then escorted by a eunuch to the Queen's buildings, which connect with the King's at one end. Your chair is finally deposited in an anteroom, and you are led through several commodious apartments into one of the Queen's reception rooms.

There are no chairs in the Queen's favorite room, although in some of the others there are clumsy stools and awkward chairs which seem to have been made by a backwoodsman rather than by skilled cabinetmakers. The Corean women from the Queen down, prefer to stand, squat, lounge or recline rather than sit down like Western mortals.

The Queen usually receives with several court ladies, maid in waiting, and a few rather good looking slave girls. She receives you with great politeness, and talks small talk through an interpreter with fluency.

She is rather a good looking woman, and suggests the Manchurian rather than the Corean type. Her face is long and oval, her cheek bones rather high, her nose long, her forehead high and broad, her mouth somewhat large, and her teeth square and yellowish in color. Her hair is a bluish black, with a sprinkling of gray. Her complexion is extremely good for a woman of her age. It is smooth and velvety, and the only evidence of time are a few crows' feet at the corner of her eyes.

For a Queen she is very simple and unassuming in her dress. Her garments are of the finest silk, her shoes are of silk or satin, richly embroidered, and such jewelry as she wears is of a plain, though substantial nature.

It consists of large and heavy hairpins of solid gold, richly jewelled; several diamond rings, and a few gold fastenings upon her cape and dress, and apparently many small jewels in her shoes. Her choice of colors shows her Oriental nature by using bright tints and striking contrasts. Her wardrobe is very extensive and is said to fill several rooms.

The Queen possesses great ability, and is said to be the ablest politician in the Kingdom. This is high praise, because Oriental politics are so crafty, involved and treacherous that a Corean wirepuller would double discount a regiment of New York Aldermen.

The Queen's predilections oddly enough, are toward the two countries of the most opposite type—the United States and China. It was through her influence more than that of anybody else that the King employed Greathouse, Le Gendre, Challet Long and other American Ministers and advisers.

She was the first to have American lights brought to Corea, and in July last, just before the war broke out, she was arranging to have a telephone and a large electric plant put into the palace grounds. Among her treasures she possesses American watches, American clocks, American revolvers, and American sewing machines.

On the other hand she has a deep love for China, and has done her best to fasten Chinese suzerainty upon her own country.

While she can read and write in Corean she prefers to do it in Chinese, and is said by those competent to judge to be a very great Chinese scholar.

She is fond of recreation and keeps in her retinue both sing song girls and geishas, or dancing girls.

She is a strict follower of etiquette and bases it chiefly upon the great Chinbook of rites. Her will is law, and within her own quarters she has the power of life and death over man and woman alike. She is not cruel, however, and in the many instances in which she has been called upon to punish her subordinates she has seldom if ever resorted to the heartless and terrible punishments so common to the far East. She is said to be a very affectionate wife and mother.

She spends several hours each day with the King. If he is alone she behaves towards him very much as wives and husbands do the world over; if he is engaged upon any business she sits or stands behind a tall, wide screen, close to the King's back, in which there are many small apertures, through which she can see everything going on. Even in the King's private audience chamber she has not only a screen, but also a lattice work in the wall, which enables her to be a witness to everything going on.

A Valuable Hen.

Frank Crouch of Central Lake, this State, has a hen whose record no other English speaking fowl can hope to break. This hen, which, for the sake of brevity, we will call Thanatopsis, began laying eggs this spring, and at last accounts had the remarkable number of 263 to her credit.

That would be a fair season's work for a pickerel, but Thanatopsis is no fish. When in the early summer the mind of Thanatopsis began to turn towards thoughts of maternity, she would have set and hatched a large and interesting family, after the time-honored custom of all well regulated hens, but found she had the habit of laying eggs so firmly fixed that she could not abandon it. In vain did she cluck and ruffle up her feathers in the seclusion of the root cellar.

Idle were her attempts to cuddle down upon the jagged edge of a cast off door knob. No sooner had she warmed the outer casing of the senseless clay than her propensity for laying eggs would fall upon her like a wet rag, and with a shrill scream she would hustle off to her nest and there, alone with her gnawing grief, lay eggs until torn away by her pitying owner.

In her mad desire to lay eggs she has lost her will power. She is a monomaniac on eggs. Still she has lucid intervals, when her mind seems as clear as that of any hen, and at these times her maternal instincts return with ten-fold fury.

Several marine animals propagate by voluntary self division. A piece breaks off and floats away. For a time it shows no signs of life, but when it has recovered from the shock of separation it developes into a perfect animal.

It is wrong to judge parents by the children they rear. The little ones may have had grandparents.

What the Beautiful Girl Herself Says.

SURPRISING STORY OF THE DAUGHTER OF A NOTED PROFESSOR.

How She Excited the Curiosity of All Her Friends.

One of the best known and most interesting men in Brooklyn, N. Y., is Professor J. M. Elwood, residing at 43 Cornelia street. He is a noted scholar and professor. His charming daughter is a young lady of most estimable character and has hosts of friends everywhere.

She became fearfully nervous and run down, and this was followed by a most severe attack of St. Vitus' dance. She grew worse and physicians could not cure her. She finally got well, however, by a method which astonished all her friends.

"It affords me the greatest pleasure," said the professor, "to state that my daughter, who was a sufferer from nervous and St. Vitus' dance, and who was treated for same by prominent physicians in Brooklyn without result, was completely cured by using two bottles of Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy."

MISS ELWOOD.

Such strong evidence as this must convince everybody of the genuine worth of this great medicine. Mr. Elwood's word is as good as gold. When he makes a statement people know they can depend upon it. Just such reliable statements about Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy are constantly appearing, and the people everywhere have the utmost confidence in this wonderful medicine.

They take it, and perfect health results. The popular Miss Elwood thinks it is indeed a wonderful remedy when it will cure what all the skill of other physicians cannot benefit.

Why waste time in trying uncertain and untried remedies, when here is a physician's prescription, a discovery made by the greatest living specialist in curing nervous and chronic diseases, Dr. Greene, of 35 West 14th street, New York City. If you take this medicine you can consider yourself under Dr. Greene's direct professional care, and you can consult him or write to him about your case, freely and without charge. This is a guarantee that this remedy will cure, possessed by no other medicine in the world.

Negotiating for Netherwood.

J. Fred MacDonald, the real-estate hustler who is always working for Plainfield's best interests, is engineering a transfer of the Hotel Netherwood property.

Smith, the City National Bank, E. R. Pope, and G. W. Rockfellow, are the owners about to transfer the property to Mr. Noble.

The property cost $250,000, and it is understood Mr. Noble will acquire it for $100,000. The deal will be closed in a short time.

Harrison Denies It.

"I OWE MY LIFE TO YOU."

A Wilton, N. J., Girl's Experience With a Noted Massachusetts Woman.

[SPECIAL TO OUR LADY READERS.]

Life is never more precious than in the heyday of youth, when every dream is a promise, and every thought an inspiration.

It is natural that Miss Gertrude Sickler, a young lady who lives at Wilton, N.J., is grateful for the great boon of life.

She suffered terribly with suppressed and painful menstruations. The doctors could only prevent her from having fits each month by dosing her with morphine.

At last, when she was completely prostrated, her father got her a bottle of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, which at once gave her relief.

That did what the doctors could not do. It cured her. She has no trouble now, and no dread of the coming month. "I owe my life to you," she writes to Mrs. Pinkham. "Oh, if other suffering women could try your valuable medicine they would bless you as I do."

Philadelphia, Jan. 5.—Prof. A. P. Thomas, dean of Hahnemann college and one of the foremost homeopathic physicians in the country, is critically ill at his residence in the country near here, and as he is over 80 years of age it is feared that he will not have the strength to resist the illness.

The Application Denied.

New Haven, Conn., Jan. 5.—The railroad commissioners have denied the application of the Danbury & Bethel Electric road for permission to cross at grade the tracks of the New York & New Haven road at a point near the Bethel station.

To Annex the Congo State.

Brussels, Jan. 5.—It is reported in official circles that the government will lay before parliament a proposal to annex the Congo state.

—Dr. B. VanD. Hedges performed an autopsy on the body of Wm. Jackson, the Negro who died yesterday in Muhlenberg Hospital, and found that decedent died from pneumonia.

—The services in the Methodist Church continue to increase in interest. Last evening four persons indicated their desire to become Christians. A special service will be held this evening to which all young people particularly are invited. The meeting will be conducted by the Drew Quartette.

—The second of a series of Winter dances given under the auspices of the Grant Avenue Social Club was held in Athletic Hall, Lee place, last evening. Supper was served about 12. The committee in charge deserve credit for the manner in which the affair was carried out. The music was rendered by Messrs. Naylor, Blake and McComas.

Bright's Disease Cured.

Mrs. Laura A. Kempton's (of West Rutland Vt.) daughter was stricken with Bright's disease. Her ankles, feet and eyes were terribly swollen. Four physicians attended her, but her life was despaired of. A mother's love surmounts all difficulties, and she determined to try Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy, made at Rondout, N. Y. "How happy I am," Mrs. Kempton writes, "that I determined on that course, for one by one the well-known symptoms of the disease left her. Words cannot express my gratitude and I cannot too earnestly recommend this great medicine. Her recovery was entirely due to Favorite Remedy, which was the only medicine taken after her case was abandoned by the physicians." Dr David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy can be had at any drugstore It has never yet failed to cure where the disease is within the range of medicine.

—The gymnasium in the new Y. M. C. A. building is almost completed, and will be opened about the middle of next week. Work will be commenced on the bowling alleys the first of next week.

REMOVAL.

Dr. Lighthill begs leave to give notice that he has removed to

NO. 132 CRESCENT AVE,

(a few doors from his former location) where he can be consulted on all chronic diseases of whatever name and nature.

Dr. Lighthill refers with pardonable pride to the success of his practice in Plainfield and submits below a few of the many testimonials which he has received from grateful patients. A mass of similar ones can be seen at his office.

AN ALMOST MIRACULOUS CURE.

The Statement of Mr. Edward Teel, Jr., of Dunellen, N. J.

TO THE PUBLIC:

From a sense of duty I desire to call public attention to the almost miraculous cure which Dr. Lighthill effected in the case of my wife. For eleven years she had been afflicted with piles of an unusual severe and distressing character. She suffered every day of her life the most intense pain, attended with frequent and profuse hemorrhage. This state of things debilitated her entire system until she became a perfect wreck of her former self.

We made every effort to obtain a cure but they all resulted in bitter disappointment, although a number of physicians of excellent reputations for skill in that direction had treated her case. She grew worse and worse all the time, the pain became perfectly unbearable and I felt she could not bear the strain of her condition much longer. In this extremity, a friend of mine, Mr. W. E. Dilts, a resident of Roselle, N. J., a passenger conductor on the New Jersey Central told me that he had been similarly affected, and had been permanently cured by Dr. Lighthill, after other medical skill had failed. He assured me that the doctor would cure my wife, no matter how severe her case may be, and his prediction proved perfectly correct. In spite of her desperate condition, Dr. Lighthill, I am glad to say, has effected a complete and perfect cure in her case, and has given her new life.

Since the cure has been effected she has gained in health and strength and is so improved in appearance that her friends scarcely recognize her. They all consider her cure as almost miraculous, and Dr. Lighthill's praise is heard on every side. Our gratitude to Dr. Lighthill is unbounded and we only hope that other sufferers may be benefited by this publication.

EDWARD TEEL, JR.

A Flattering Testimonial from Colonel John Dietrich, One of Plainfield's Oldest and Best Known Residents.

16 ARLINGTON PLACE,
Plainfield, N. J., July 17, 1894.

I am profoundly grateful to Dr. Lighthill for his speedy and radical cure of a most painful malady of over ten years standing with which I was afflicted.

I deem it proper to say to all afflicted to place themselves under the care of this skilful physician and be permanently cured.

I will cheerfully impart any information I possess when called upon.

JOHN DIETRICH.

Mr. Thomas Callahan of No. 214 Richmond street Cured of a Very Distressing Trouble by Dr. Lighthill.

PLAINFIELD, N. J., June 1, 1894.

TO THE PUBLIC:

For some time past I have been greatly distressed with noises in the head. They were all over my head and troubled me constantly; they were loudest at night when everything was quiet and at such times would often keep me from sleep and disturb my rest. In fact they got to be so bad and distressing that they affected my whole nervous system as well as my health. I did not obtain the least relief until I placed myself under the care of Dr. Lighthill, of No. 132 Crescent avenue, who effected a complete cure in my case in a short time and made me a very happy man.

THOMAS CALLAHAN,
214 Richmond street.

A Card From Mr. T. R VanZandt, of Nos. 304 and 306 Park ave., Plainfield, N. J

I certify with pleasure that Dr. Lighthill has effectually cured me of a most painful case of piles. For some time past I had been subject to its attacks, but the last attack was so exceedingly painful that it completely upset my whole system. The pain extended to my legs and in many other directions, and made me so nervous that I could neither sleep, sit down, lie down or move about without serious discomfort and distress. Such was my condition when I applied to Dr. Lighthill for relief, and I am glad to say that as soon as he took hold of my case, I began to improve, and in a short time found myself completely cured. Dr. Lighthill has also effected a radical and permanent cure in a most terrible case of piles on my cousin, Mr. J. V. Z Griggs, of Rocky Hill, N. J., whose flattering testimonial is in Dr. Lighthill's possession.

The Proper Bait.

"Papa," said Benny Bloobumper, who knew his father's weakness, "you know all about fishing, don't you?"

"Yes, my son," replied the elder Bloobumper, graciously. "There is very little about that gentle sport with which I am not familiar."

"You know all about the right sort of bait to use, don't you?"

"Certainly."

"That's what I was telling Freddy Fangle, and we agreed to leave something about fishing for you to decide. We had a discussion about it."

"Well, Benny, I am very glad to see you taking such an interest in fishing, as well as to see such confidence in your father's judgment. What was the point on which you and Freddy differed?"

"I don't know as we differed, exactly. Freddy didn't seem to quite agree with me, though."

"State the question, Benny."

"Well, fish run in schools, sometimes, don't they, papa?"

"Yes."

"That's what I told Freddy."

"Didn't he believe it?"

"Oh yes, he believed that all right."

"Then what is it you wish me to decide?"

"Well, I told him that when fish ran in schools the proper bait to use was bookworms. Now ain't I right, papa?"

Mr. Bloobumper reached for his slipper, and Benny disappeared out of doors.—Harper's Bazar.

A HINDOO POEM.

A Hindoo died—a happy thing to do—
When fifty years united to a shrew,
Released, he hopefully for entrance cries
Before the Gates of Brahma's Paradise.
"Hast been through Purgatory?" Brahma said.
"I have been married!" and he hung his head.
"Come in! come in! and welcome, too, my son Married and Purgatory are as one."
In bliss extreme he entered Heaven's door,
And knew the bliss he had ne'er seen before.
He scarce had entered in the garden fair,
Another Hindoo asked admission there.
The self-same question Brahma asked again:
"Has been through Purgatory?" "No. What then?"
"Thou canst not enter!" did the god reply.
"He who went in was there no more than I."
"All that is true, but he has married been,
And so on earth has suffered for his sin."
"Married? 'Tis well, for I've been married twice."
"Begone! We'll have no fools in Paradise."
—Charles Hills.

OTERO AND THE CZAR.

Once Expelled by Him From Russia, She Now Returns in Splendid Style

Most persons who remember the first mania for Spanish dancing some four years ago have not forgotten Otero. After she left New York she appeared in Berlin, Paris, Vienna, and Budapest. In all four cities she was known as the diamond queen, because her neck, wrist and bodice were ablaze with gems whenever she danced. The German newspapers gave her and her diamonds columns of free advertising, but stopped short when informed that she had sold all her gems at auction for $57. The sale took place in Budapest about two years ago; the purchaser was a Hungarian soubrette. From that time until a few months ago little was heard of Otero. A few weeks ago, however, this paragraph went the rounds of the Berlin and Vienna dailies:

"We hear from Madrid: One of the celebrities who has come into public notice in connection with Alexander III's death and burial in St. Petersburg is our fellow country woman, Corolina Otero. She was expelled from Russia long ago because at a stag party given by a Grand Duke she gave a too life like representation of Truth, that is, she appeared in the costume of Eve before the fall. As is well known, she has been the favorite of whole familes of princes and noblemen.

"After the Czar's funeral she took it for granted that the order expelling her from Russia would become a dead letter, and she started for St. Petersburg. In itself her journey would have passed unnoticed had not she herself made it a topic of the times by carrying it out with royal and theatricol splendor. Miss Otero rode away from Paris in a special train consisting of a hotel car, a first class carriage, and a baggage van. The train was to stop only for changes of locomotives.

"This piece of amusement, which cost some $22,000, was paid for by the present admirer of the Spanish beauty. He is a half crazy English lord, who wastes his time and millions in Paris. The friends of Carolina Otero fear that she will be sent back from St Petersburg as swiftly as she went there."

The Wig-Wag Language of Dogs.

It is no doubt a startling conclusion, but Dr. Louis Robinson, who has been investigating the mysteries of canine language, has practically set up the theory that a dog speaks with his tail tip.

In the case of all hunting dogs which pack together the tail is carried aloft, and is very free in movement. There is no doubt that foxhounds habitually watch the tails of those in front of them when drawing a covert. If a faint drag is detected, suggestive of the presence of a fox, but not sufficient to be sworn to vocally, the tail of the finder is set in motion, and the warmer the scent the quicker does it wag. Others seeing the signal instantly join the first, and there is an assemblage of waving tails even before even the least whisper is heard.

Should the drag prove a doubtful one the hounds separate again and the waving ceases, but if it grows stronger when followed up the wagging becomes more emphatic, until one after another the hounds begin to whine and give tongue and stream off in Indian file along the line of scent. When the pack is at full cry upon a strong scent, the tails cease to wave, but are carried aloft in full view.—London Dispatch.

Are You Ever Annoyed

by a buzzing or roaring sound in your head? Have you difficulty in hearing distinctly? Are you troubled with a continual dropping of mucus, irritating the throat and causing you to cough? Is your breath unpleasantly affected and accompanied with bad taste? Is your hearing less acute If so, you have catarrh and should at once procure a bottle of Ely's Cream Balm, the best known remedy. The Balm will give instant relief.

A Slight Misunderstanding.

A well-known brilliant entertainer, who has just returned from a five years' tour in South Pacific seas, has many amusing tales to tell, among which is the following:

"I was ordering my advertisement in a Melbourne daily newspaper office one day," said the narrator, "when a tall, lanky countryman walked in and said he wanted an 'In memoriam' notice in the obituary column of the paper.

"'My ole guvnor died a year ago,' he explained, 'and I should like a bit o' poetry in the paper about him.'

"'All right,' answered the clerk, 'have you brought it with you?'

"'No,' said the rustic; 'can't you fix me up a bit?'

"'Certainly,' replied the clerk. 'Our charge for "In memoriam" notices is six shillings an inch.'

"A look of intense amazement passed over the countryman's face.

"'Good gracious!' he cried, as he made for the door, 'I can't stand that. My guvnor was six feet high!'"—Melbourne Argus.

Chapped Hands and Lemon Juice and Glycerine.

Rough, painful, perhaps bleeding hands are bad enough, but what annoys you most is the untidy looks which scrubbing seems only to make worse and which nothing but warm weather will quite remedy. Yet lots of people find relief in a simple mixture prepared by us from lemon juice and glycerine—names which suggest comfort and cure. Glycerine is everywhere used, but people forget the cleansing and whitening properties of lemon juice and its power of neutralizing the bad effect of strong soaps. REYNOLDS'S LEMON JUICE AND GLYCERINE once used is never forgotten. Sprinkler bottles 25c. REYNOLDS'S PHARMACY, Park and North avenues.

THE OUTLOOK OF TRADE

Bradstreet Reports No Material Improvement.

Revival of Business Is Said To Depend on a Settlement of the Currency Question—Notwithstanding the Depressing Conditions Merchants Are Hopeful.

New York, Jan. 5.—There has been no material improvement in general trade within a week and the more important trade centres does not reveal specially hopeful views for an improvement in business in the near future. In many instances trade revival is declared to depend on a settlement of the currency question. The most encouraging expressions of opinion are that merchants are hopeful.

Among more favorable conditions are reports that stocks of goods of all descriptions in the hands of jobbers, manufacturers and retailers, west and northwest, are generally smaller than usual at this season; that the business of the year in dry goods, hats, shoes, millinery and groceries has been fairly satisfactory, and that cold weather has stimulated demand for coal and seasonable fabrics.

The silver lining is found in an advance of 25c. a ton in shipping rates to northern markets from southern points of pig iron production. Print cloths are weaker and sell at a shade under last week's quotations. Coal too, is fractionally lower. Pig tin is lower, as are pork, raw sugar, Indian corn, live cattle and hogs. Foreign competition with American woolen dress goods for spring delivery is sharp, and domestic fabrics are rather neglected, although many mills are busy on orders for men's wear woolens. Following the list of decreases in prices are leather, lumber, coal, naval stores, coffee, oats and cotton, for which quotations have been maintained. Cheaper grades of shoes at eastern factories are higher, as are wheat and lard.

Total bank clearings at sixty-nine cities report an aggregate for the calendar year 1894, $44,995,000,000, 16 per cent. less than in the panic year 1893 and 26 per cent. less than in 1892, the year of the largest volume of bank clearings. Clearings for 1894 constitute the smallest aggregate for nine years, the next smallest total being $41,255,000,000 in 1885 and $44,120,000,000 in 1884.

Available wheat, United States and Canada, Jan. 1, aggregated 127,009,000 bushels, 17,000,000 bushels more than one year before, 11,000,000 bushels more than two years ago and 49,000,000 bushels more than three years ago. Wheat afloat for and in Europe on the 1st inst. aggregated 57,744,000 bushels, a falling off of 22,200,000 bushels from one year ago, 10,500,000 bushels from two years and 20,700,000 bushels from three years ago.

The continuance of gold shipments, amounting to $5,550,000 for the week, and the corresponding shrinkage of the treasury gold reserve, supplement the effect of limited railroad traffic and small earnings on the leading granger lines in creating a bearish speculative sentiment.

At larger eastern cities only a moderate volume of business is reported, Buffalo and Boston inclining to regard the near outlook the more hopefully. Philadelphia and Pittsburg are naturally affected somewhat by lower quotations for iron and steel, and Baltimore prefers awaiting orders from commercial travelers before expressing opinions on the outlook.

General trade is reported quiet at Charleston, Nashville and Memphis, with collections fair only. At Chattanooga and at Atlanta very little is doing in wholesale lines, the former reporting manufacturers quiet as a result of prolonged holiday influences and the weather. At Savannah trade is quiet but improving, and collections are only fair. Cotton manufacturers are taking some new contracts, but merchants will act with extreme conservatism. Augusta cotton factories report a fairly good demand and improved collections, though general trade shows no gain. City and country trade is reported fairly satisfactory by Jacksonville. Damage from extremely cold weather in Florida to fruit and vegetables is quite heavy, orange growers being affected seriously. At Birmingham manufacturers report orders scattered, general trade quiet, and collections only fair. There is only a small volume of business at New Orleans and collections are slow. At Galveston trade is very quiet and orders are for needs only.

All western cities announce practically unchanged trade conditions and light or moderate volumes of business, conspicuously Cleveland, Cincinnati, Detroit and Louisville, although the straits city reports cold weather has stimulated orders and Louisville that merchants are more hopeful. At Chicago orders are mostly of the filling-in variety. Jobbers and wholesalers at Kansas City and Omaha report only a moderate trade, whereas at Des Moines and Milwaukee mercantile collections are slower.

At Toronto business is quiet and the prospects are thought not favorable, although stocks of merchandise generally are small.

THE NAVASSA INVESTIGATION.

Attorney General Olney Will Try To Correct the Evils Complained Of.

Baltimore, Jan. 5.—United States District Attorney Marbury has begun an official investigation of charges of ill-treatment and illegal detention of laborers at Navassa island by the Navassa Phosphate company. The investigation is being made at the instance of Attorney General Olney, who has directed Mr. Marbury to make it thorough, and then to advise him as to the best course to pursue in correcting the evils complained of.

Navassa island is little more than a barren rock with scant vegetation. It is owned by the Navassa Phosphate company of this city, which engages men to mine the heavy deposits of fertilizer which are found there. The company exercises sole authority and its representatives have repeatedly been accused of brutal and inhuman treatment of the workmen.

The present charges are brought by two colored men, Don Carlos Abrams and John H. Devine, who recently returned from Navassa in a pitable condition.

They told United States District Attorney Marbury how the Navassa laborers were starved and abused. Ten men died on the island in the first three months. Finally the situation became so desperate that the workmen demanded to be returned to their homes and 118 of them left Navassa early in November. Fourteen of them died on the voyage.

John H. Fowler, vice-president of the Navassa company testified that none of the laborers were illegally detained, ill-treated, or starved.

Mr. Marbury will lay all the facts before Mr. Olney. From the way he talks, it is to be inferred that he is in favor of a thorough investigation by the government at the island.

THE SHREWSBURY RACES.

Fastest Time Ever Made by a Third Class Yacht.

Red Bank, N. J., Jan. 5.—The fastest race ever sailed over the ten-mile course of the North Shrewsbury River Ice Yacht club by a third class yacht took place yesterday. It was for the challenge pennant. During the race the wind blew a gale from the north and the boats were nearly lifted from the ice when a puff struck them. The race was over the triangular course, which was sailed over three times, making a distance of ten miles. The starters were: Commodore W. Morford's Flaw, Edward A. Say's Daisey, and Charles Burd's lateen-rigged Zip. The last named boat was an easy winner, sailing over the course in fourteen minutes. The Flaw finished two minutes and thirty seconds later.

Three races will be held to-day, one in the morning and two in the afternoon. The successful yacht in these races will be pitted against the Burlington yacht on Monday for the championship pennant.

The lists for the skating races which are to be held this afternoon are well filled. The principal race will be for the Monmouth county championship, distance one mile.

HE SAVED HIS WIFE.

The Husband Beheaded by the Engine That Carried Her Away.

Pottsville, Pa., Jan. 5.—Jacob Fisher and wife, while crossing the Ringtown bridge, on the Catawiska branch of the Philadelphia & Reading railroad, at midnight, were struck by a locomotive. Fisher was beheaded and his wife seriously injured.

The trestle is a high one, and the unfortunate couple were about half way across when overtaken by the locomotive. The couple were on their way from Ringtown.

They had waited at the end of the bridge for a train to pass, and they then started across when they were caught by the engine that was following after the train to push it over the grade.

Fisher threw his wife on the cowcatcher and attempted to jump on it himself, but fell and was run over and beheaded. Mrs. Fisher had both legs broken. Fisher was 40 years old, and leaves three children. He was a carpenter by trade.

The Madagascar Mails.

Washington, Jan. 5.—In regard to the temporary suspension of United States mails to the interior of Madagascar because of the war between the French and the natives, Superintendent Brooks of the foreign mail service states that all mails can be delivefed at Tamatave, the chief port of the island, and letters for interior points will be held at Tamatave subject to call.

Placed in an Insane Asylum.

Brooklyn, N. Y., Jan. 5.—Mrs. David L. Foutz, wife of the captain and manager of the Brooklyn baseball team, has been removed to the asylum for the insane at Amityville, L. I. Mrs. Foutz became suddenly violent while at the Jamaica station of the Long Island railroad yesterday, and the efforts of several persons were found necessary to place her on a train.

Sympathetic Mine Strike.

Dubois, Pa., Jan. 5.—The men employed in the Rochester mines here, and in the mines of the Bell, Lewis & Yates Co., at Reynoldsville, have struck because the company stopped work in the Sprague and Hamilton mines at Reynoldsville and partly in the Rochester mines, and discharged the hands. Those who were still retained struck out of sympathy.

Thinks Justice Shiras Acted Hastily.

Camden, N. J., Jan. 5.—Prosecutor Jenkins, of Camden county, thinks Associate Justice Shiras, of the United States supreme court acted hastily in granting the writ staying murderer Lambert's execution, and if the justice had had knowledge of the decisions of the lower courts, he would have refused Lawyer Semple's request.

Valuable Flour Mill Burned.

ILLINOIS HOSPITAL FIRE

Insane Institution at Anna Partly Destroyed.

Over 200 Female Inmates Rescued—Stood Shivering in the Snow Until Temporarily Provided For—Many Carried Out by Force—One Attendant Missing.

Anna, Ill., Jan. 5.—The excitement caused by the fire at the Illinois Southern hospital for the insane has somewhat subsided and the inmates from the burned portion have been temporarily housed in other portions of the building and in the village.

The fire broke out in the centre section of the building and that section with the south wing, which comprises over half of the entire structure, was completely destroyed. The north wing, machinery, laundry and kitchen departments were saved.

The south wing contained the quarters of the female patients, the male patients being quartered in the north wing. All the patients, to the number of 500, were, it is thought, safely removed.

As soon as the fire was discovered the danger bell was rung to alarm the guards and arouse the inmates. The fire spread so rapidly that the hospital employes instantly realized that it could not be controlled by the meagre fire apparatus with which the institution was supplied, and while some of the guards rushed through the halls and corridors, unlocking doors and opening windows, others ran to the village and summoned the local fire department.

The hospital contained nearly 1,000 inmates, and the section which was destroyed was occupied by over 200 women. In the south wing of the building were located about 300 women and children, and the north wing of the building was set apart for the men, and at no time was this section in danger.

As soon as the guards gave the alarm, the insane women began screaming, and rushing to the further corners of their cells, threw themselves in a heap on the floor or cot and in many cases it required the united efforts of several employes to convey them to places of safety.

They were gotten out safely, however, and were grouped on the snow-covered ground. For a few minutes they shivered in the bitter cold air until they could be marched or carried to other buildings. The villagers rushed to the assistance of the asylum people and rendered valuable aid in rescuing the sick and refractory inmates.

Several times some of the patients broke away from their guards and attempted to rush back into the burning building. They were quickly caught, however, and in cases where they were violent they were bound to other patients by straps and ropes. A messenger was sent to Cairo, Ill., asking for the help of the fire department at that place. A special train was quickly made up, and the department soon appeared upon the scene. The lines of hose were soon laid and four big streams of water poured on the burning building.

The flames were quickly gotten under control, and the fire was confined to the centre section of the south wing building. In this department were located the quarters of the physicians and other employes. In many cases the officials lost all their instruments and personal effects. A close estimate of the damage to the building places the loss at $275,000, and it is believed this is fully covered by insurance.

One of the female attendants, Miss Ida Anderson, is reported missing, and it is feared she perished in the upper dormitory. It is possible, however, that she may be located at one of the houses of the village, where many of the attendants were carried on account of being injured by burning clothing or suffering from exposure on account of the frightfully cold weather.

Chairman Wilson's Successor.

Washington, Jan. 5.—Mr. Dayton, of West Virginia, who was elected in November last as the successor of Congressman Wm. L. Wilson, the chairman of the house committee on ways and means, was on the floor of the house yesterday and introduced generally to members on the republican side of the chamber by Mr. Dalzell of Pennsylvania.

Held in $10,000 Bail.

North Adams, Mass., Jan. 5.—Dr. Leon Deleruyssen has been held here in $10,000 for the grand jury for criminal assault. The testimony in the district court was sensational. One of the witnesses against the man was Florence L. Shipman, a 14-year-old girl, who accuses him. The bail is the largest ever set in the North Adams police court.

$22 Per Ton for Steel Rails.

Philadelphia, Jan. 5.—It has been learned that the price to be paid for the 30,000 tons of steel rails recently ordered by the Pennsylvania Railroad company is $22 per ton. Last year the company paid $24 per ton for its rails, and the present price is the lowest it has ever been.

EPWORTH LEAGUE.

Lesson For the Week Beginning Jan. 6. Topic, The Laver.

SCRIPTURE READINGS.—Ex. xxx, 18, 21; John xv, 3; Titus iii, 5; Heb. x, 22.

Bodily cleanliness is the common Scriptural symbol of soul purity and righteousness. To appreciate its full religious significance we need to contrast the abounding filth of oriental streets and house and prevalent habits of uncleanness of the common people with the scrupulous neatness commanded in the Mosaic law. It is well in this connection to make an inductive study of the Bible teaching of purity, comparing the rules for bodily purification given in Exodus, Deuteronomy, Numbers, Leviticus, with the New Testament customs of the Jews described in Gospels, Acts and Epistles. The laver in the form of a huge bowl of brass mounted on a pedestal of the same metal stood conveniently in front of the tabernacle or holy tent and near to the brazen altar on which the sacrifices were burned. Water stood continually in the upper and probably also in a lower part, so that the priests could wash both hands and feet every time they came into the sacred inclosure. In the temple similar arrangements, but on a larger scale, were provided. Skillful mechanical contrivances filled the lavers with clean water and carried away the foul. These frequent washings were not only for the purpose of removing the blood and impurities unavoidable in handling the sacrifices and doing the service of the sanctuary with bare feet, but were a special object lesson in piety as a sign of the holiness of the God worshiped. Godliness was cleanness. It was a long remove from the pollutions of daily sinful life in principle, though in the very midst of the camp. They who bore the vessels of the Lord must be pure. Washed bodies and clean, white linen garments were a constant reminder to priests and people that God could not look with the least degree of allowance upon sin.

In the New Testament rite of baptism we have a continuation of the same thought. It is sacramental in that it is an outward and visible sign of the inner and spiritual grace which abides in the soul of every true child of God. It saves not in the sense of some unknowable operation, "not the putting away of the filth of the flesh, but the appeal of a good conscience toward God through the resurrection of Jesus Christ." We are to draw near to God "with a true heart in fullness of faith, having our hearts sprinkled from an evil conscience and our body washed with pure water."

The Heart of Religion.

This is found not in subtle philosophical distinctions in doctrine nor in exact observance of ritualistic forms and ceremonies, but in spiritual experience and vital personal piety. This is receiving large recognition by all branches of the Christian church. It is manifest in the character of the preaching of the present time, in the public prayers, addresses and testimonies of professing Christians. Consistent and pure practice in daily life is more than ever before insisted upon as a mark of real piety. Helpfulness to the poor and sinful is developing rapidly the energies of many of the young folks. If the rising generation have less of theory than former ones, they are surely displaying promise of greater practical activity and brotherhood.

The Parish Church at Epworth.

Like most of the ancient parish churches of England, the one at Epworth is of stone and is surrounded by the village cemetery. It stands on a slight eminence. An avenue shaded by trees on either hand leads up to it from the village which lies just below. The tombstones are well cared for, the grass kept closely cut and gravel walks in good repair, so that the churchyard in summer evenings when the twilight lingers late is a favorite resort for old and young. Near the side entrance is the tomb of Samuel Wesley, on the top of which his son John stood and preached to the people when the pulpit had been refused him because of his Methodist practices. Inside the church are seen the same chairs which stood near the pulpit in Wesley's day and were then considered ancient, and the baptismal font which is supposed to have come from a still more ancient church of Saxon times.

PARISH CHURCH, EPWORTH, ENGLAND.

Danger Avoided.

There is danger frequently in societies which become large and influential that they be made to serve financial ends, for which they were never intended, and so their true purpose be thwarted or hindered. It was wise in the board of control at the meeting in Boston, in view of all circumstances, to adopt this resolution:

"That we deem it unwise and unconstitutional for any individual member of the board or any member of the cabinet to give direction to the financial policy of the League other than that directed by the board."

What Is Good.

Of goods or absolute ends there are but two—perfection and happiness.—Sir William Hamilton.

There are 600 German chapters of the Epworth League, increasing in numbers and enthusiasm.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Topic For the Week Beginning Jan. 6. Comment by Rev. S. H. Doyle.

TOPIC.—The week of prayer. What shall it mean to us?—II Chron. vi, 13-21, 29-33; vii, 1-3.

The Scriptural references used to illustrate the topic are taken from Solomon's prayer at the dedication of his temple in Jerusalem. This was a very important work, and it was proper that God's house should be dedicated to him in prayer. Prayer is suitable at all times, but specially so at important periods of life. Jesus Christ Himself, when upon earth, set us an example of this kind. Before every important event in life he spent much time in prayer. Just before choosing the twelve apostles, a most important act of his life, he spent the entire night in prayer, and immediately before the crucifixion in the garden of Gethsemane he agonized in prayer with God. The week of prayer is an important period. It is the first week of a new year. It is usually the introduction to a series of evangelical meetings, looking forward to the reviving of the church and the conversion of sinners. It may well, therefore, be spent in prayer and supplication to God for His blessing, and we may do well to consider the question, What shall it mean for us? following the suggestions of our topical reference:

1. It should mean a week of supplication to God (II Chron. vi, 18-21). Here Solomon simply pours out his soul to God in prayer and calls upon the Lord to hearken unto his cry. This should be the leading characteristic of this week. It should indeed be a week of prayer. Too often this element is neglected, and from the very start the aim is to lead men to Christ, so that it is not a week of prayer, but a week of gospel services. Valuable as these are, this is not the object in this week. It should be spent principally in prayer, and the other can easily follow.

2. It should mean prayer for self, and also for others (II Chron. vi, 29-33). Here Solomon prays that God will hear and answer the prayers of the people as each one prays for his individual needs and wants, and also that he will hear and answer the prayers of the strangers who come to the temple to worship. In the public services during this week self should not be forgotten, and we should also remember in our prayers all for whom it is our duty to pray.

3. It should mean a week of answers to prayer (II Chron. vii, 1-3). Here we have the answer given to Solomon's prayer. God comes and takes possession of the temple. So we should want our prayers to be answered, and they will be if we pray in faith, believing that it shall be done unto us.

Bible Readings.—I King xviii, 36; Job xi, 3; Ps. cxix, 58; Isa. lv, 6; Jer. xxix, 13; Lam. iii, 41; Zech. xii, 10; Math. vii, 2; xxi, 22; Mark xi, 25; Luke xviii, 1-7; xxiii, 42; John xiv, 13, 14; Rom. viii, 15; Gal. iv, 6; Phil. iv, 6; I Tim. ii, 8; Heb. x, 22.

The Guiding Finger of God.

The encouraging thing about all this is that we can so plainly see God's guiding hand. As from the beginning, so down to the present day. Christian Endeavor has grown in just this way. Without much human effort or direction, as it would seem, the work has spread and gathered force and volume.

In every state and province at home, in every denomination in America, then in England, Australia, Mexico, India, China, Japan, France, Turkey, Spain, South America, were those that grasped the underlying ideas of Christian Endeavor, whose hearts were enlisted, who saw its possibilities, and who went to work to realize them in their own neighborhood.

Now this same practical and blessed story is being repeated in Germany, in Switzerland, in Norway, and I hope I shall be able to soon add Sweden and Denmark to the list.

Thus directly under the guiding finger of God is the work advancing. Thus is our glorious fellowship wider with every setting sun.—Francis E. Clark.

Card Playing and Dancing.

The New South Wales Christian Endeavor union has had a question before it which has involved considerable discussion. It relates to amusements. Some members who saw no objection to cards and dancing desired an expression of opinion from the union. The committee passed a resolution declaring that while, according to a plank of their platform, they could not legislate for the individual conscience, they did not approve of either amusement.—Exchange.

The Right Way.

How blessed to know that our Lord directs all that befalls us; that nothing can frustrate His plans; that the way He leads us is not only a right way, but with all its briers and thorns, its tears and trials, it is the right way.—Episcopal Recorder.

In Calo Quies.

Should sorrow o'er thy brow
Its darkened shadows fling
And hopes that cheer thee now
Die in their early spring;
Should pleasure at its birth
Fade like the hues of even,
Turn thou away from earth;
There's rest for thee in heaven.

If ever life shall seem
To thee a toilsome way
And gladness cease to beam
Upon its clouded day;
If, like the weary dove,
O'er shoreless ocean driven,
Raise thou thine eyes above;
There's rest for thee in heaven.

But, oh! if thornless flowers
Throughout thy pathway bloom
And gayly fleet the hours,
Unstained by earthly gloom,
Still let not every thought
To this poor world be given,
Nor always be forgot
Thy better rest in heaven.

When sickness pales thy cheek
And dims thy lustrous eye
And pulses low and weak
Tell of a time to die,
Sweet hope shall whisper then,
"Though thou from earth be driven,
There's bliss beyond thy ken;
There's rest for thee in heaven."

DR. G. C. OSGOOD, Lowell, Mass.

"Castoria is the best remedy for children of which I am acquainted. I hope the day is not far distant when mothers will consider the real interest of their children, and use Castoria instead of the various quack nostrums which are destroying their loved ones, by forcing opium, morphine, soothing syrup and other hurtful agents down their throats, thereby sending them to premature graves."

DR. J. F. KINCHELOE, Conway, Ark.

Castoria.

"Castoria is so well adapted to children that I recommend it as superior to any prescription known to me."

H. A. ARCHER, M. D., 111 So. Oxford St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

"Our physicians in the children's department have spoken highly of their experience in their outside practice with Castoria, and although we only have among our medical supplies what is known as regular products, yet we are free to confess that the merits of Castoria has won us to look with favor upon it."

(Copyright, 1894, by Bacheller, Johnson & Bacheller.)

It was nearly sunset, when, looking toward the road that ran at the bottom of the little hill on which her house stood, Belinda saw the tall form of Aaron, driving a black and white cow before him. He had discarded his high silk hat for a straw one, but otherwise he was attired as in the morning.

"Now, den!" he exclaimed, ten minutes afterward, "wot yer tink of dat keow, Sister Tinsley? Dat's a monstrous fin' keow wot I fotches yer."

Aunt Belinda looked approvingly at the animal. "How much milk do she guv?" she asked.

"'Bout three gallon, 'jes' like cream."

"Whar you buy her, Brudder Aaron?"

"Didn' buy her," he answered. "I done raise her. Had dat keow when she were a littl' cah'f. Lemme go put her in de shed. Den we kin talk more 'bout de bisness of de mornin'."

"S'pose you milks her fust, Brudder Aaron, I'll go fotch a pail. It's 'bout milkin' time, an' I wants ter tas' her milk."

Involuntarily Aaron glanced up and down the road, and then he said: "Dunno 'bout milkin' in my bes' breeches, Sister Tinsley."

"Oh, you kin be keerful," said she, "an' I wants ter tas' her milk," and she went into the house for a pail.

Aaron was not a very rapid milker, but in the course of time he finished and brought the pail to Belinda.

"Dat's not much milk," said she; "looks like yer keow done guv mos' her milk in de mornin'."

"Dat's so," said Aaron, "jes' wait 'til mornin' and yer sees de milk."

"All right," said Aunt Belinda, "you kin tuck her to de shed an' tie her up."

When Aaron came back he wanted to sit down and talk matrimony, but Belinda would have none of it.

"I'se busy now," said she, "I'se got ter iron Capt. Camp's shirts. You come in de mornin', Brudder Aaron, arter breakfas' an' den I'll talk bisness."

"Got one job o' milkin' out of yer, anyway," said she to herself as he departed.

When Aaron was entirely out of sight Aunt Belinda took the cow from the shed and led her down to the old field and left her near the fence which ran by the road side, where there was some grass growing in among the bushes in the fence corners.

Very soon Moses Lipscomb appeared upon the scene, dressed in his ordinary clothes, tarnished, torn and easy of fit. He was very warm and very much excited.

"Look hyar, Aunt B'linda," said he, "dat ar long-legged brack Aaron was down at de stor' at de cross roads an' braggin' dat he was goin' ter marry yer, an' sayin' dat it was all fixed an' settled. Wot dat mean, Aunt Belinda?"

"Dat mean he lie," said Aunt Belinda, quietly, "nuthin' 'sprisin' 'bout dat."

Moses' face brightened. "Den how 'bout me, Aunt Belinda? Gwine ter take me? Yer says you guv me my ahnser ef I comes arter supper."

"Tain't so easy, Moses," replied Aunt Belinda, speaking meditatively, "dar's lots of tings to be thunk 'bout. Now dars dis one ting, I wants a keow an' ef a husban' comes 'long wot kin guv me a keow, wot de good of my takin' one wot cahn't? Kin you guv me a keow, Moses?"

The brown countenance of her suitor lengthened. "Keow!" he ejaculated.

"Yes, sah," said Aunt Belinda, "an' I'se got ter see de keow fus' 'fore I guvs any man my ahnser. Cahn't take no man an' den trus' him for de keow. Now, don' yer say annudder word, Moses Lipscomb. I hain't got no time to be talkin' now, I'se got ter finish ironin' Capt. Camp's shirts, for he wants dem ter-morrer mornin' 'fore breakfas'. So git 'long, Moses, an' ef you comes ter-morrer arly an' tells me ef you kin guv me a keow or ef yer cahn't I'll guv yer yer ahnser. Go 'long now," and she went into the house and left him.

For a few moments Moses stood as if he had just been sentenced to the county prison.

"Keow!" said he to himself. "Ef she'd asked me to guv her de handl' of a milk pail I hain't got none," and then, turning, he walked mournfully away.

When Aunt Belinda opened her door the next morning and looked out upon the dew-besprinkled landscape, sparkling under the first rays of the morning sun, she saw Moses Lipscomb standing in front of the house. His hands were in his pockets, his soft old hat was stuck on the side of his head and near him was a black and white cow, contentedly nibbling the short grass.

"Mornin,' Aunt B'linda," shouted Moses, "hyar I is an' dar she. Don' say I don' guv yer no keow! Dars a monstrous fin' animal an' I fotch her to yer an' I guve her ter yer. Now wot you say ter dat, Aunt B'linda?"

Aunt Belinda put her hands on her hips and threw a severe expression into her face

"Dat's a mighty fin' keow," said she, "but look hyar, Moses Lipscomb, whar you git dat keow? You knows you hain't got no keow, and you knows yer never saved money 'nough outer yer wages, when yer gits eny, ter buy de hide of a keow, let 'lone a hull one. Now den, you stan' up straight 'fore me an' tell me whar you git yer."

Moses stood up before her and looked her straight in the face. "Aunt B'linda," said he, "I done stole dat keow."

"Stole her!" cried Aunt Belinda, "and fotch her to me!"

"Dat's 'zactly wot I done," said he. "You knows jes' as well as I does I hain't got no keow an' couldn' never buy one, an' when I knows I can't have yer, Aunt B'linda, widout I gits a keow, I'se boun' ter git a keow, an' says I ter myself: 'Moses Lipscomb, ef you kin tote a three hundred poun' hog, ef yer tries ter, yer kin git a keow ef yer tries ter.' But bress my soul, Aunt B'linda, I hain't no need ter try, 'cos when I was agoin' home yes'day evenin' de fus' ting I see when I gits down to de road was dat brack an' w'ite keow eatin' grass by de fence in de ole field. Lor! How I jumps when I see her. Says I: 'Moses, de good angel Gabriel sen' you dat keow. Dat keow don' b'long 'bout hyar an' I reckon she b'long to dat druv wot wen' through hyar t'other day, an' she done git los' in de bushes an' was luf b'hin'.' So I jes' gits over de fence an' I sits down on de grass near by her an' I watch her all night, an' arly dis mornin' I druv her up hyar. I'se bin waitin' more'n two hours when yer come out, Aunt B'linda, an' ef yer keeps her in de shed dat ar driver won' fin' her when he comes back, wot he cahn't do an' leave de res' of de cattl'."

"You done stole her!" repeated Aunt Belinda.

"Yes, I done jes' dat," replied Moses, "an' wot's more, I'd stole forty keows rather dan not git you fer a wife, Aunt B'linda."

"Moses Lipscomb," said she after a slight pause, "you is wot I calls a one-sin man. Yous done gone an' stole dat keow, but dar you stops. You don' come ter me an' tell no lies 'bout it. Now dar's dat long-legged Aaron, he done stole a keow an' fotch her ter me an' tell me a bucketful of lies 'bout her. I'se lived long 'nough ter know dat I cahn't git no husban', 'specially in dis part ob de county, widout no sin at all, an' so I'se boun' ter take de one wot's got de leas' an' I reckon dar aint nobody round hyar wot's got less dan one, an' so, Moses, I'll take you. An' now I'll guv you de milk pail an' you milk dat keow, 'cos tain't fair ter de pore dumb creetur ter let her go not milked, an' den you tuck her whar you fin' her an' leave her dar. When you done dat yer kin come back an' have yer breakfas'. Ef dar's one ting I hates," she continued as she went into the house, "it's milkin'!"

It was about an hour afterward and Moses was still eating his bacon and dipping his corn bread into the melted and bubbling fat when Aunt Belinda, looking out of her window, saw the long-legged Aaron striding over the field. He was dressed as on the day before except that he wore a pink rose in his buttonhole.

As Aunt Belinda liked to have her conferences outside of the house, where there was room to talk, she went out to receive him.

"B'linda," said he, as he took off his hat and held out his hand, "my deah B'linda, whar's de woman on de top of de earf wot more gladden de heart—"

"Stop dat, you long-legged Aaron!" she cried. "Wot you mean ter speak like dat ter me an' call me sweetheart names? Don't yer do dat no more."

"Wot you mean?" cried Aaron. "Ain't that 'fair twixt us all fix'd? Didn't I guv yer dat keow ter mar'age settl'men,' paid in 'vance? Didn't you p'omise me—"

"Go 'long wid yer!" shouted Aunt Belinda. "How yer dare come hyar wid yer lies an' yer thieveries? I seen yer yes'day mornin' comin' over de field! I seen yer stop an' look at dat brack an' w'ite keow, an' I knowed you knowed dat keow didn' 'long in dis hyar neighborhood, an' I jes' thunk ter myself I'd ask dat long-legged Aaron ter guv me a keow an' see wot he do. Den yer done stole dat brack an' w'ite keow an' fotch her ter me an' tell me lot o' lies 'bout raisin' her from a littl' cah'f! Now let me tell yer, you Aaron, dat brack an' w'ite keow is my keow. Day 'for yes'day I bought her outer a druv of cattl' an' paid fer her wid money wot I done save from washin' an' ironin', an' I put her in dat field, an' nobody 'bout hyar done know I'se got dat keow. An' you done stole my own keow an' come hyar wid a pack o' lies an' ask me ter marry yer on 'count of yer guvin' her ter me—my own keow!"

"Mis' Tinsley, said Aaron, drawing himself up, "de langwidge you's usin' ter me is 'fensive ter my min'. Ef you's de kin' o' woman wot uses sich langwidge I don't want no wedlock wid yer, an' I don' want ter hyar no more fool talk 'beout yer buyin' dat keow. I'se too ole fer any sech tales as dat. Jes' you guv me back my keow an' I retires from dis controwersy. An' look hyar, Miss Tinsley, ef yer don' guv her back I'll have yer ... 'tainin' keows on false pertenses."

At this moment a sudden noise was heard inside the house, a stool was tumbled over the floor, a table was pushed roughly to one side, there was a quick stamping of feet and in an instant Moses Lipscomb, his eyes glaring and his head lowered like a bull about to charge a matador, appeared in the doorway.

"Git, you, Aaron!" cried Aunt Belinda. The injunction was not needed. The long-legged suitor gave one glance at the doorway. This was not the first time he had seen Moses Lipscomb with his head down and his eyes glaring, and without hesitating he turned and fled, with Moses after him, roaring like an infuriated king of the herd.

Aaron's legs were very long; his silk hat fell off, and he did not stop to pick it up, and his fright and his strides were so great that he soon left his pursuer far behind. Moses stopped and, giving the hat a kick that would have done credit to a college football man, and, shaking his fist after his flying foe, he shouted:

"GIT, YOU, AARON!"

"Ef ever I kotch you, you daddy-long-legs, I'll butt yer low an' I'll kick yer high, 'til yer never knows de diff'rence twixt de earf an' de sky! Comin' hyar an' talkin' ter my B'linda 'bout 'restin' her fer false pertenses an' a keow!"

When Moses returned he found Aunt Belinda seated in a chair, laughing until the tears ran down her cheeks.

"He make me crack my sides!" she exclaimed, "I jes' say ter him: 'Git!' an' he more'n got!"

Moses sat down on the grass, wiping his face with the corner of a torn shirt sleeve.

"Was all dat de true fac'," he said, "wot you done say 'bout buyin' dat keow an' her bein' yer keow all de time?"

"True as Gospel," said she, "I kin show yer de 'ceipt wot I made de driver guv me 'fore I paid him. Wouldn' trus' no stranger like him wot might come back hyar sayin' he done los' a keow in Perkins' ole fields."

"Den, B'linda," said Moses, "I reckons I'se a no sin man, 'cos ef I done guv back de keow wot I stole to de pusson wot I stole her from, den I'se all right."

"Go 'long, you Moses," cried she, "I hain't got no time ter talk sich fool talk wid yer. I'se got ter iron Capt. Camp's shirts an' tuck 'em down ter him, an' you go git me some good light wood fer ter he't de irons wid, and when you done dat I'll guv yer ten cents ter pay pore Uncle Pete fer de hire of dat coh't wot you comes hyar wid ter pay 'tentions ter me wid a view ter matermony. I knows you hain't got no money ter pay him wid, an' ef we's ter be married we's got ter start squar."

The reader of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly on the blood and mucous surface of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer $100 for any case that it fails to cure.

FUNERAL OF LITTLE JOSIE.

Flowers Heaped on the Casket Holding the Mangled Form.

Hope Chapel was a sad place at 1:30 Sunday afternoon, when the funeral of little Josie Cook, who was killed by the Royal Blue train, took place. There was a large gathering of mourners, despite the bad weather, and the little casket was heaped with roses and lilies and other floral bloom, by the many who had held dear the friendship of the life so cruelly crushed out. Rev. G. Kennedy Newell conducted the impressive ceremony, and spoke with rare tenderness of the dear Sunday-school child who had been called to the Jesus whom she loved. He referred to the happiness of the week before, when Josie had spoken a Christmas piece from the platform, and he held out comfort and consolation for the mother and grandmother, who wept through the sad scene. The eyes of most the assembly shed their tribute to the little one gone from the school, and at the grave in Hillside Cemetery tears mingled freely with the rain. The mournful duty of carrying the casket was filled by Messrs Thomas Reed, Walter Mague, Alexander Muir and John Cose.

The session of the Chapel Sunday-school was mournful with the sense of double loss of the week, Mrs. Sparks having been laid to rest from the chapel the day previous.

Personally-Conducted Tours to Washington, D. C., via Pennsylvania Railroad.

The series of three-day tours arranged by the Pennsylvania Railroad Company, under its perfect personally-conducted tourist system, gives every one an opportunity to visit Washington under most favorable circumstances and at a very reasonable cost.

The tours leave New York on January 17, and at intervals of three week until May 23, 1895, inclusive. The rates, including accommodations at Washington's best hotels, are $13.50 from New York and $11.50 from Philadelphia; proportionate rates from other points.

Detailed itinerary will be sent on application to Tourist Agent, 1196 Broadway, New York, or Room 411, Broad Street Station, Philadelphia.

Machinery Helps Labor.

The Kappa Delta Phi of the High School debated Friday the question "Is the use of machinery beneficial to the laboring classes?" Charles B. Morse '95 and John V. Beekman, Jr. '95, defended the affirmative; and Charles Noble '95 and Henry Eggerding '96, the negative. The president decided the debate in favor of the affirmative.

Charles B. Morse '95, John V. Beekman, Jr. '95 and Arthur B. Crane '97 were appointed a committee to arrange for a stereopticon entertainment for some Friday evening soon.

The programme committee reported the following programme for the next meeting: Debate—"In general, are monopolies beneficial?" Affirmative—J. H. Craig '96 and A. B. Crane '97. Negative—F. W. Cornwell '96 and Ernest Rapalje '97.

A committee, consisting of Ernest Rapalje '97, H. B. Drake '95 and F. W. Cornwell '96, was appointed to make arrangements for a Kappa Delta Phi straw-ride.

A BUD AMID ROSES.

Delightful Coming-Out Party of Miss Mabel F. Wilder.

An "at home" was given by Mrs. Edward Payson Wilder at her pretty residence, 922 Central avenue, Saturday afternoon, to introduce the beautiful Miss Mabel F. Wilder, who, artistically gowned in white, and bearing a magnificent bouquet of roses, stood with her mother and the fair Miss Lucy Morris of New York, in the reception room to greet the coming guests. The drawing room, parlors and music room were profusely decorated with LaFrance, American Beauties, and Jacqueminot roses, and the banquet room was a perfect vision of pink. The massive mantelpiece in the reception room was banked in LaFrance, intermingled with English violets and beautiful filmy green. Assisting the fair ones who received were the Misses Howard and Miss Mattie Baxter of New York, Miss Edith Gilbert, Miss Lilly Moore, Miss Phœbe Lovell, and Miss Florence Wilder of Plainfield. At either end of the banquet board, made beautiful by dainty candelabra and artistic clusters of lovely roses, the whole enhanced by banks of ferns and potted plants which filled the alcoves and graced the sideboard, stood Mrs. William A. Cummings of New York, and Mrs. Leander N. Lovell, presiding over the feast of delicacies served by Max Wiertz.

Among the guests assembled to honor the fair hostess and the lovely debutante were many from New York, Brooklyn and Jersey City, who, together with the many Plainfield society people, numbered fully three hundred and fifty.

One of the features which added much to the enjoyment of the affair was the excellent music provided by Argenzia's Orchestra of Brooklyn.

There was an entire absence of that formality which ofttimes mars similar occasions, the gathering resembling rather a happy house party than a formal reception, and silently bearing evidence of the tact of the genial hostess.

As 7 drew near, the guests began to depart, not neglecting to shower congratulations for the great pleasure afforded them.

After the guests departed the happy house party to the number of twenty-five reassembled in the dining room to partake of an excellent banquet, gay mirth and pealing laughter seasoning the repast.

Dancing was next in order, and the fair women with their gay gallants floated through the beautiful rooms in time with the witching music or sought cozy nooks for rest and quiet chat until near the midnight stroke.

The Heart, Not the Coat, Makes Humanity.

An apt illustration of the fact that little people have a limitless capacity for enjoyment, regardless of environment or poverty, was noted by a Daily Press reporter Saturday afternoon.

Three little girls, whose garments gave evidence of their lowly station, had formed themselves into a merry sleighing party. The smallest, a mite of five or six, was the centre of the trio and, stooping low, with her shoes for runners, had caught the skirts of the one in front, who was pulling the animated "sleigh" thus formed at quite a rapid gait, while the third assisted in the rear by pushing the little one along.

The keen pleasure depicted on their faces was in marked contrast to the sombre features of a fur-covered little one of about their own age, who was being drawn in an opposite direction on a handsomely painted sled by a sumptuously attired older sister, who glanced with scorn at the improvised tandem.

Week of Prayer at Trinity.

In the Trinity Reformed Church last evening a profitable and spiritual prayer meeting of one-half hour's duration was held, led by A. B. Clemens, after which an interesting and helpful discourse was given by the pastor, Rev. Cornelius Schenck. It was the opening service of the week of prayer, to be held every night this week, and the seventy-five persons present were more than repaid for coming out such a stormy night to ask God for the gift of His Holy Spirit.

Tonight a half-hour meeting for men only will be held in the lecture room of the church at 7:30, to be followed by the regular prayer meeting at 8.

Early Evening Burglary.

The ringing of the burglar alarm in the International Fur Company's store at 7 Saturday evening attracted the attention of the police, and Proprietor J. A. Karet, who lives in the Clifton flats, was notified. A thorough investigation was made, but nothing was missing from the stock. An attempt had been made to enter the store through the trap door in the cellar.

Legislature Tomorrow.

The New Jersey Legislature meets tomorrow, and, save for the election of a United States Senator to take the place of John R. McPherson, there is very little purpose to their meeting or their continuance in session.

As to the election of a United States Senator, William J. Sewell will be elected, with scarcely any opposition in votes.

THE PRESS THEIR STUDY.

High School Boys Emulating the Profession Devoted to the Preservation of the World's History and the Record of Civilization's Progress.

The Plainfield High School Press Association has been organized. The charter members are five young men who are deeply interested in newspaper work, and the conditions of membership are that the applicant shall be a full believer in the value of the newspaper and zealous after knowledge of the art preservative of all the arts. The little corps of zealots express especial admiration for the Plainfield Daily Press, which it considers a complete home newspaper because of its devotion to science and progress and its department of high-grade literature in addition to the news of the day. The members of the association are ambitious to graduate into newspaperdom, which offers so varied and useful a field. They are espousing the profession among the girls of the school, with the view of reviving the dormant literary society as an auxiliary to the Press Association.

As Feb. 22 is Washington's Birthday there will be no meeting that day

A Slippery Time.

Plainfield people who ventured out yesterday did so at the risk of their equilibrium. The cold rain following a dash of sleet had during Saturday night coated the pavements with a treacherous sheet of ice, and nearly everybody who valued sound limbs and uncracked skulls took to the middle of the road, where there was more room to fall, and a little better footing. A considerable number of brave Christians defied the elements and attended morning service, and there was the customary postoffice contingent after the morning mail. But the effort to maintain dignity and uprightness was so great that in the afternoon and evening most people staid indoors.

The evening service of the First Baptist Church was omitted last evening on account of the storm.

Minnie Lester Tonight.

Much interest is displayed over the engagement of Minnie Lester, with her new company, band and orchestra at Music Hall this week. Miss Lester has always met with a hearty reception here, because both she and her company deserve the patronage of theatre-goers.

Do Not Delay.

"What can be done with little, need not be done with much", is an old saying, and if applied to the care of the eyes will avert much trouble and expense. Do not defer giving them attention at the first hint of waning sight. Remember that an examination at Collier's will cost you nothing, and will insure you reliable advice as to what measures, if any, should be taken to prevent chronic disease of the eyes and the countless disorders consequent thereto.

Marvelous Results.

From a letter written by Rev. J. Gunderman, of Dismondale, Mich., we are permitted to make this extract: 'I have no hesitation in recommending Dr. King's New Discovery, as the results were almost marvelous in the case of my wife. While I was pastor of the Baptist Church at Rives Junction she was brought down by pneumonia succeeding la grippe. Terrible paroxysms of coughing would last hours with little interruption and it seemed as if she could not survive them. A friend recommended Dr. King's New Discovery; it was quick in its work and highly satisfactory in results. Sold by L. W. Randolph druggist. Regular size 50c and $1; our price 45c and 90c

Revival in Vincent Chapel.

The revival meeting in Vincent Chapel Saturday evening was especially devoted to the younger members of the church. The meeting was opened with a hymn, after which Charles Scudder of Drew Seminary led in prayer. The Drew Quartette, consisting of Mr. Raymond, Mr. Rowe, Mr. Andriese and Mr. Harper, sang "Ashamed of Jesus", a hymn written by a child ten years of age.

Mr. Harper then addressed the meeting with words appropriate to the occasion. His text was Psalm 39:7—"And now, Lord, what wait I for? My hope is in Thee".

Mr. Raymond gave a short talk on "Procrastination, the Thief of Souls".

After the singing of a few favorite hymns, there was a season of prayer, which was followed by another hymn, and the benediction by Rev. Dr. C. R. Barnes.

The Sunday afternoon service in Vincent Chapel was called "A Meeting of Decision". The Drew Quartette opened the meeting by singing "Rock of Ages, Cleft for Me". This was followed by a prayer by Mr. Harper.

The school next listened to an address by Mr. Rowe. His text was John 12:21—"We would see Jesus".

After a number of short prayers, Rev. Dr. Barnes made an address. Another hymn was followed by prayer. After J. W. Jackson, the school superintendent, had given the customary Sunday-school notices, the meeting was dismissed by Dr. Barnes.

During this week, the week of prayer, meetings will be held in Vincent Chapel every night.

A Deluge at Trinity.

It was fortunate for the Trinity Church people that the rain storm did not happen on a week day, or their church might have been badly damaged by water. Yesterday morning Sexton Mundy found the water pouring into the church and lecture room at the east front corner of the building. He summoned H. E. Gayle, the builder, and after tubs and pails were set to catch a portion of the running water, Mr. Gayle made an examination of the roof and found that the large tin leader on the front of the building was frozen solid and the water had backed up and overflowed into the church. An hour's work remedied the trouble and saved a big bill of repairs.

—John Bodine of Grandview avenue had the thumb of his right hand badly crushed at the Pond Machine Tool Works.

"I know an old soldier who had chronic diarrhoea of long standing to have been permanently cured by taking Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy,' says Edward Shumpik, a prominent druggist of Minneapolis, Minn. I have sold the remedy in this city for over 7 years and consider it superior to any other medicine now on the market for bowel complaints. 25 and 50c bottles of this remedy for sale at Reynolds's Pharmacy. THERE'LL BE A RACE.

England Accepts America's Terms.

There will be an international yacht race this year for the America's Cup.

The Royal Yacht Squadron, at its meeting in London today, decided that it would not be objectionable to give the receipt required by the Cup Committee in the event of the trophy being won by an English yacht, as specified by the deed of gift of 1887.

New Brunswick Greeks in Town.

The Delta Upsilon Society of Rutgers College to the number of 15 drew up in front of McVey's about 9 Saturday evening and climbing out of their box sleigh proceeded to view the town, making the echoes ring with frequent college yells. Soon, however, hunger drove them back to the bountiful feast prepared for their enjoyment by he of the luxurient Lord Dundrearys and the sunny smile. Song, joke, and college call seasoned the dinner and the fun was fast and furious.

Following the college boys at the genial Mac's was a lively party of six society belles from Morristown, who gave way in turn to several parties from out of town, attracted equally by the good sleighing and the prospective banquet with which the North Avenue Boniface with the exceedingly high forehead, was sure to provide for their delectation.

Opening of the New Annex.

The new operating room at Muhlenberg Hospital, which is one of the most convenient and complete in the State, was used Saturday for the first time, when a delicate surgical operation was most successfully performed. The chief operator was Dr. G. W. Endicott, whose skill and success were admired and complimented by the entire hospital staff. Muhlenberg is now one of the most complete establishments of its kind, and its records prove Plainfield to have a medical staff that any city would be proud of.

Warning to the Public.

The Citizens Organized Aid Association would warn the public against persons going from door to door begging under assumed names or presenting false statements. All householders are asked to send persons begging at the door or on the street to the office of the C. O. A. A. with a householders ticket, (if these are available), when the agent will give the householder the benefit of all she has learned of the case. If the householder desires to give assistance in case of worthy applicants he may state this willingness on the ticket.

To Toot All Right Hereafter.

The report that the North Plainfield Fire Department is to have a new fire gong is pronounced by Chief Fairchild untrue. The gong is all right, and has not been sent away. The steam valve was sent several days ago to the Gamewell Fire Alarm Company, with the idea of locating the exact trouble. It has been found, and the firm who made it will supply a new valve, and it is then expected that the borough fire alarm system will be in as perfect condition as Plainfield's. Today is the time set for testing the new valve.

Suicide of S. T. J. Byam.

S. T. J. Byam of 19 Tiers street, Newark, manager of the New York office of the Pratt & Whitney Company, manufacturers of machinery and machine tools, at 138 Liberty street, New York, shot himself this morning in the right temple in his office. He was taken to the Hudson Street Hospital in a dying condition, and expired five minutes after his arrival there.

DEATH OF DANIEL CORY.

Plainfield's Landmark Passes Away at the Ripe Age of 87.

Daniel Cory, a landmark of this section, died at 7:30 last night, of his apoplectic stroke. He would have completed his 87th year in June, and all of his life was spent at his birthplace, the old homestead at Warrenville. Mr. Cory was a man of great industry, and by his push and thrift amassed a fortune. He studied for the law, and was graduated, but never practiced. He leaves a son, John Cory of Front street, and a widow, his second wife. The funeral will take place Wednesday afternoon at 1, at the late home of the deceased.

Send Us the Recipe.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE DAILY PRESS:—Those of your readers who have been in Germany will remember with pleasure the "Kaffee Kuchen" used in homes at breakfast. It is also called "Moravian Sugar Cake", as it is made by Moravians in their settlements all over the world, whether in Russia, Germany, Holland, England or America. My aunt, the widow of a distinguished Moravian bishop, baked the best "Kaffee Kuchen" I ever ate. I have the recipe printed in English for the benefit of American friends. Should any of your readers wish to enjoy it, they need but ask me for a copy. Yours etc.,

Easton, Pa. H. T. FRUEAUFF.

Sixty and Carman Speak.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE DAILY PRESS:—The undersigned had their attention called to an article published in your paper Dec. 26, "Were they afraid to face the traps?" We wish to state that our absence from the shoot was unavoidable and that we were not afraid in the least. We infer, judging from the tone of New Market Sport's article, that some of the New Market contingent might be agreeable to shooting a match, and to that end we hereby challenge any two residents of New Market or Dunellen to a match on live birds, the conditions of which may be arranged by calling at Carman's Market, Dunellen, any time in the near future.

Came Here to Marry.

New York papers yesterday published a romantic story of the alleged elopement of Edwin S. Westlake and Alice T. Tewksbury, locating the marriage in Plainfield. As a matter of fact, most of the story was moonshine. Westlake is a Boston clergyman's son, and the girl also is from Massachusetts. They have for some time been anxious to mary, and the girl's parents have been anxious too. They came to Plainfield to have the ceremony take place quietly among strangers, hunted up Rev. Mr. Rodman, were married by him just as he would have married any other people under similar circumstances, and immediately they left town.

Little Ones Spread Christmas Sunshine.

The little ones of the Children's Home were entertained by the Sunday-school of All Souls Church in the church parlors Saturday afternoon. A pretty Christmas cantata was given for their benefit by the little people of the school, and at its conclusion marches and games were enjoyed by all.

Cocoa and cake were served in abundance, and it did the heart good to witness the keen enjoyment of the merry little people in their effort to make their less fortunate guests happy. That they succeeded was due in great measure to the efficient management of Mrs. H. B. Wells of Washington avenue, who had charge of the happy party of young philanthropists.

A large sleigh came for the children at 5:30, and they returned to the Home. Their pleasure was greatly increased by their sleighride to and from the church, for which additional enjoyment they were indebted to the kindness of William Hand of Park avenue.

The Week With the Methodists.

The Week of Prayer will be observed with union services by the Front Street and Grace Methodist Episcopal churches. Meetings will be held in Vincent Chapel every evening, beginning at 8. Owing to the interest shown during the last week, the services will be evangelistic in character. Already nearly a score have committed themselves to a Christian life. The Drew Quartette will be present and sing this evening.

—It is understood that Edward White has leased from the Misses Conklin the store adjoining his present one, and that an archway will be cut through. This is to be done to make room for his large stock of goods and increasing business.

There is good reason for the popularity of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. Davis & Buzard, of West Monterey, Clarion Co., Pa., say: "It has cured people that our physicians could do nothing for; we persuaded them to try a bottle of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy and now they recommend it with the rest of us." 25 and 50c bottles for sale at Reynolds's Pharmacy, Park and North avenues. THE TROLLEY RAN WILD

Mad Career of a Car Down a Kingston Hill.

Motorman Charles Link Terribly Injured and Will Probably Die—One Passenger Jumps in Safety—The Other Four Badly Bruised—The Car Demolished.

Kingston, N. Y., Jan. 7.—A car of the Kingston City Electric railroad ran away on the Broadway hill, and Motorman Charles Link, Conductor James Norton and two men and two women, Mrs. James Seifferth and Kate Mulligan, passengers, had a lively experience.

One of the men jumped from the car and landed in safety. Motorman Link received injuries which may prove fatal, while Mrs. Seifferth is suffering from a severe nervous shock and bruises. Miss Mulligan and Conductor Norton were not hurt.

The hill, which extends from St. Mary's Roman Catholic church to Ferry street, is about half a mile long, is very steep, and down this hill the car slid in a few seconds. The track was covered with ice, and although the brakes were put on at both ends of the car, the sand boxes used and Link reversed the motors, the electricity failed to take effect.

By this time the car was moving at the rate of a mile a minute, and many excited spectators gazed in horror at the runaway. The car kept the rails until the sharp curve at the foot of the hill was reached, and when it struck the turn so great was the impetus that it bounded in the air, straight way into the front of the Cornell Steamboat company's building, twenty-five feet away.

Motorman Link was on the front platform and one end of the platform struck the bluestone archway of the building, while the other end of the platform dashed throught the glass front of the towing office, jamming Link through the wooden frame and glass. He was terribly cut and bruised, while Mrs. Seifferth and Miss Mulligan, also Conductor Norton and the man who had remainder on the car, who were on the rear platform, were knocked down. Link was taken to the Kingston hospital and the women to their homes.

The car was demolished and the front of the building damaged.

NEGROES FIGHT A DUEL.

Spectators Were More Seriously Hurt Than the Participants.

Charleston, Mo., Jan. 7.—A duel with pistols took place shortly after noon between two negroes on the street in the very heart of the business centre of the city. The duellists were Job Edwards and Brick Crawford. They had trouble over a "crap" game, and the dozen shots they fired did more damage to outsiders than to the shooters.

Lawrence Glover, a prominent young man, received one of the bullets in the intestines, and his recovery is doubtful. Deputy Marshal John Dickmeyer was shot through the thigh while attempting to arrest the negroes. Edwards received a bullet in his arm and Crawford's scalp was cut by another. The friends of the wounded men talk strongly of lynching the prisoners.

Bitter Winter Weather in Germany.

Berlin, Jan. 7.—The first bitter cold weather of the winter has been felt here. On account of a heavy snow storm street traffic has been impeded for the last several days in the suburbs. Trains were delayed throughout Germany and on several roads of the west and south were forced to cease running. It snowed for four days in the Rhoengebirge and the railways in northwestern Bavaria and Hesse-Nassau were blocked completely by drifts of snow and ice.

Talmage Preaches in New York.

New York, Jan. 7.—The Rev. T. De Witt Talmage preached his first sermon as a New York clergyman yesterday afternoon in the Academy of Music. An audience that filled every seat and occupied the aisles of the great building greeted the doctor with applause when he came on the stage. He will preach at the Academy of Music every Sunday afternoon hereafter.

Disastrous Fire at Toronto.

Toronto, Ont., Jan. 7.—One of the most disastrous fires in the history of the city originated in the basement of the Globe (newspaper) office and that was killed and several others severely burned to the ground. One fireman was killed and several others severely injured by falling walls. The total loss will probably reach in the neighborhood of one million dollars.

Corn for Nebraska Sufferers.

Wilmington, N. C., Jan. 7.—A car left here last night loaded with corn and North Carolina rice for the Nebraska sufferers. It was contributed by the Atlantic Coast Line and the car bore the legend: "Corn and North Carolina Rice, Contributed by the Atlantic Coast Line for the Nebraska Sufferers."

Found Dead in a Cellar.

Jersey City, Jan. 7.—Franklin N. Lockman, 23 years, a letter carrier attached to the Bayonne postoffice, was found dead in a cellar underneath the hardware store of J. Levitch in Bayonne yesterday.

ANSWER TO INGERSOLL.

Cardinal Gibbons' Remarks During the Presence of Mgr. Satolli.

Baltimore, Jan. 7.—Archbishop Satolli, the apostolic delegate, officiated at the pontifical high mass celebrated at the cathedral yesterday, and Cardinal Gibbons delivered the sermon. The edifice was crowded in every part.

Mgr. Satolli was assisted by the cathedral clergy and many visiting clergymen, and over 300 students from St. Mary's seminary occupied places in the sanctuary. The choir rendered an elaborate programme of special music. After the mass Cardinal Gibbons held his regular New Year's reception in the parlors of the archiepiscopal residence.

In his sermon his eminence evidently had in mind Col. Robert G. Ingersoll, who recently delivered his lecture on the bible in this city.

"It is fashionable as well as profitable," his eminence said, in beginning his sermon, "to cast odium as well as ridicule on Christianity and the sacred scriptures, which are the basis of the Christian religion. A man of limited capacity, but of fluency of speech and shafts of wit can propose objections and difficulties in half an hour which may take a learned man a month to answer."

CAPT. GIESSLER'S SCHEME.

Has Established a Colony on Cocos Island To Dig for Treasure.

San Francisco, Jan. 7.—News comes from Panama that Capt. Giessler, who has a record on this coast as a daring navigator, left that port one month ago with a small party of Germans to hunt for Pirate Morgan's buried treasure on Cocos island.

Giessler firmly believes in the treasure and his latest scheme is to establish a colony on the island and carefully dig over the place where the pirate buried his hoard, seventy five years ago.

Last summer Giessler made a trip with two men from Frisco to Cocos island but one man died and Giessler returned to Panama. Then he went to Costa Rica and secured a permit to establish a colony on the island. This party of eleven people, including three women and two children left New York last November. They expect to remain on the island six months.

They carried forty tons of provisions and they expect to dig over all the ground where the treasure is supposed to lie.

JOHNSTOWN IN PERIL AGAIN.

Rising Waters Threatening the City with New Danger.

Johnstown, Pa., Jan. 7.—The thaw of ice and snow which has set in as a result of a warm rain, has resulted in considerable damage to property. Scores of residences and business houses are damaged.

The police were sent out to warn merchants and others to clear the ice from their buildings.

A more threatening danger, however, is the rapid rise of the river. The great snow of a few days ago is melting on the mountains, and, reinforced by a heavy fall of rain, is swelling the Conemaugh and Stony Creek. There is an additional danger of a gorge of ice at the Pennsylvania railroad stone bridge.

In any event, unless the heavy rainfall ceases in a few hours and a cold spell comes another flood, such as was experienced last spring, seems inevitable.

MURDERED BY MEXICANS.

Father and Son Killed While the Mother Narrowly Escapes.

Tucson, Ariz., Jan. 7.—News has been brought in by stage from Mammouth that F. M. Doll, a prosperous rancher and merchant, his son 21 years old, and his wife were murderously assaulted by Mexicans near their ranch on the Arivaipa, Graham county. They were driving together, and without warning the Mexicans opened fire, killing Doll and his son. Mrs. Doll was shot in the face and the assassins would have killed her also but for a team coming from an opposite direction. Seeing the approaching wagon the Mexicans fled. Mrs. Doll will recover. A posse is pursuing the miscreants.

A Curious Combination.

Clinton, Ia., Jan. 7.—Mrs. Eunice Holcomb, aged 74 years, and A. Hollenbeck, aged 78, have been married at Monmouth, Ia. This is the woman's sixth husband, she having received a divorce from spouse number five only two weeks ago. The marriage makes a curious complication in the Like family. The bride is a stepdaughter of David Like and the groom is his father-in-law. The bride thus becomes mother-in-law of her stepfather and step-mother of her stepmother.

French Explorers Traced.

London, Jan. 7.—The Central News correspondent in Shanghai says that the French explorers Grenard and Rhins, who have been missing some two months, have been traced. Rhins was murdered by Chinese after leaving L'Hassa, the capital of Thibet. Grenard was arrested by a rebel officer and was started for Peking. On Dec. 10 he passed through Tai-Yuen, province of Shan-See.

3,000 Men Discharged.

London, Jan. 7.—Many tinplate works in the Swansea district are closing their contracts. Some 3,000 men have been discharged in accordance with previous notices. The cause of the reduction is the decrease of the American demand.

WAS NOT RETALIATION

Keeping Out of Our Cattle a Sanitary Measure.

Secretary Gresham's Statement as to the Sugar Tariff Widely Discussed Throughout Germany—Freiherr Von Hammerstein's Views on the Question—Other News.

Berlin, Jan. 7.—Secretary Gresham's statement as to the American sugar tariff and treaty obligations has been discussed widely since the arrival of the last United States mail. Among deputies as among editors the one opinion is that the United States ought not to enforce a discriminating sugar tax against Germany. Many deplore that the American representatives in Washington regard Germany's prohibition of American cattle as a retaliatory measure. They say it is merely sanitary. To bolster this argument the government published in the Norddeutsche Allegemeine Zeitung a paragraph to the effect that Belgium's decree against American cattle showed how justifiable Germany's action was from a sanitary point of view. Freiherr von Hammerstein, a great man in the farmer's alliance and the leading agitator among the high tariff conservatives, says:

"I cannot understand why Americans raise such an outcry about German retaliation. There is no such thing, although Germany is justly entitled to retaliate if so inclined. The American differential duty on German sugar certainly is a sufficient cause for retaliation, and there can be no doubt of it since Secretary Gresham himself admits that Germany has been unfairly treated by the United States.

"Germany has been obliged to prohibit imports of American cattle owing to the discovery of Texas fever among them. The existence of the disease was beyond the slightest doubt. Even if congress had not passed the sugar clause, the prohibition would have been issued and maintained. The question is absolutely independent of the sugar tax.

"England formerly was Germany's best customer in the cattle market. Now she shuts her doors to our cattle for fear of infection. The whole effort of Prussian farmers is directed to reopening the English market. Therefore they watch jealously that no new development, like Texas fever in the German herds, give England an excuse to defer this reopening. America's violation of treaty obligations will not give force to her demands for a repeal of the prohibition nor will it stimulate Germany to offer the United States commercial advantages in return for commercial injuries. Still the agrarian party does not desire to provoke a customs war. The two nations are too closely allied by mutual interests. Such a conflict would be disastrous to both."

Finally the agarian leader admitted that America's treatment of German sugar was perhaps not altogether unwelcome to Freiherr von Hammerstein Loxten, his cousin and minister of agriculture, who now had a chance to do something for the agrarians. He did not believe however, that the minister of agriculture would be able to meet the extreme demands of the high tariff men, most notably those made by Count von Kanitz. This admission reveals the kernel of the whole question. The government aims to satisfy as far as possible the agrarians and bring their party to the ministerial phalanx in parliament. The reports that American beef has been prohibited for the benefit of Australia is erroneous. The German prohibitions cover also imports from Great Britain, through which most Australian meat comes in transit. The agrarian pressure now bearing on the government will lead soon to a decree against all Australian beef, whether sent directly or via England.

For the relief of the sugar interests the government has prepared a bill to keep in effect the full bounties which, according to a recent measure, should be reduced on Aug. 1, 1895, and should be abolished on Aug. 1, 1897.

The fashionable season in Berlin opened with the New Year's fetes at the Old Castle. Although the imperial family has not moved in from the new palace in Potsdam, Prince and Princess Henry of Prussia and the Prince and Princess of Saxe-Meinigen have been at the castle during the past week. Prince and Princess Frederick Leopold have returned to the palace on the Wilhelm Platz. Other high members of court society are arriving daily and making ready for a long programme of social gayeties.

The Empress Frederick has given a series of receptions in which she has kept in the background the military elements which outdazzles all else at the emperor's gatherings. Most of her guests are diplomatists, artists and writers. The painters are especially numerous, as the Empress Frederick has retained her interest in pictures as well as in sculpture. Her reunions are calculated to revive the best traditions of Berlin salons where art and letters had first place and politics was tabooed. The emperor visited his mother twice last week and took her to the old castle to show her the new decorations which she suggested and helped him plan.

Among the presents in preparation for Bismarck's eightieth birthday is a silver obelisk engraved with the names of eighty American cities which have German clubs. The givers will be eighty German-Americans who fought in the war of 1870-71.

Chancellor Prince Hohenlohe's visit in Friedrichsruh is still in doubt. It is reported that he will go within ten days and will arrange for the emperor's reception by the Bismarcks.

COULD HARDLY BREATHE.

Catarrh of the Nose, Throat, and Stomach—Life Made Miserable by Headaches, Pain and Cough.

Lida McCandless, No. 1230 South Thirtyfifth street, Philadelphia, in conversation with a reporter, said: "I had a very bad case of catarrh of the nose, throat and stomach, with frequent headaches, pain under the shoulder blades and a horrible cough. I had to keep my mouth constantly open day and night to breathe, and felt as miserable as one possibly could. I was advised to try Munyon's Catarrh Cure. I am happy to say that from the beginning I felt relieved and continued to grow better until now I am entirely well. I am so thankful that this remarkable remedy was ever discovered, and hope others will take advantage of my experience."

Have you Catarrh? Are you willing to investigate a treatment that cures Catarrh by removing the cause? If so ask your druggist for a 25c bottle of Catarrh Tablets. The Catarrh Cure will eradicate the disease from the system, and the Tablets will cleanse and heal the affected parts and restore them to a natural and healthful condition.

Munyon's Homœopathic Home Remedy Company, of Philadelphia, put up specifics for nearly every disease, which are sold by all druggists, mostly for 25 cents a bottle.

The WREN in Business

It is characteristic of the Wren that it will sneak in and occupy the nest made by another bird, in preference to building one of its own. This same trait is often seen in business. It is shown by the imitators of

COTTOLENE

No sooner has the wonderful merit of this new vegetable shortening, so much better than lard, created for it a remarkable sale and popularity, than the business wrens are ready to move upon the market with many worthless counterfeits. Any housekeeper can be easily and cheaply convinced of the value of COTTOLENE by simply giving it a trial. They will then be unwilling to go back to lard, or go down to fraudulent imitations.

IS IT THE END?

A Time of Great Mortality.

Especially Noticeable in Children.—Will Man Cease to Exist?—Can the "Omega" be Averted?

Why is it, with our improved sanitary appliances, our care to obtain fresh air, pure food, and plenty of exercise, the observance, in fact, of every hygienic law, that in spite of every care each succeeding generation seems to become weaker and shorter lived? Is it that we are now suffering for indiscretions of our ancestors, or is that terrible, unknown end of man at hand?

Whatever the cause, the existing condition of things is too apparent. Especially is this noticeable with the babies. Instead of the mother's life-giving milk, they are compelled to begin a struggle for existence with the bottle. The result in many cases is disastrous. The little one, failing to obtain necessary nourishment, grows weaker daily, until death ends the struggle. The end in these cases is Simply Starvation.

With this termination so often the case, the best physicians of the day have resorted to the use of Bovinine, that great and original raw food product, as a means to save the babies.

In this connection Dr. A. B. Robinson, 61 Dudley St., Boston, after commending Bovinine most highly for various complications where the waste of disease must be checked, and new blood, flesh, and strength created to effect a cure, says concerning this life-creating preparation, "With feeble, bottle-fed babies, a small amount added to the milk has in my practice saved many children."

Bovinine is not a medicine, but a life-maintaining, flesh, bone, and blood-making preparation that contains the greatest amount of nourishment in the least possible bulk.

Give it to the little ones while there is still hope. Your physician, if you ask him, will recommend it, and you will bless the results obtained forever.

"You know," said Col. Enderby, "it's two hundred years to a day, almost, since that DuCasse affair occurred along this very bit of coast we are looking at."

When the colonel begins a piece of information by the words "you know," I am always prepared to hear something concerning which I was totally ignorant; and I fancy the colonel would be surprised to find it otherwise.

Now, it so happened that I had heard of the French admiral, DuCasse, as having had some connection with Jamaica; nevertheless, not to disappoint my friend, I murmured, in a semi-interrogative tone: "Oh . . . DuCasse?"

"You know what I mean," proceeded he, with confidence. "The French were backing up the Old Pretender—the son of James II. by Mary of Modena,—and that scoundrel DuCasse was sent out here with a fleet to see what he could pick up. It was a couple of years after the great earthquake that sunk Port Royal; but there was plenty of booty to be had in the island yet, and the Frenchmen knew it. He fetched up one fine day off Morant bay, yonder, and set ashore a part of his force there, and a part further down the coast, at Cow bay—we drove along by there this morning. Well, he caught us napping, that's the truth. He and his rabble were no better than the worst of pirates. They made bloody work of it, I tell you; men, women and children—slaughtered 'em all, sir, by Jove! Well, it's a good while since; but I've always wished I could have a chance to get back at 'em; and maybe the time may come yet—there's no telling—eh?"

"Did they get much plunder?" I inquired.

"Plunder!" cried the colonel, his warlike mustachios bristling. "Loaded down with it—loaded to the gun'll! And slaves!—they carried off near fifteen hundred of 'em. We gave 'em a touch of our quality before they got off, though," added the grizzled warrior. "Col. Beeston was governor—Sir William he was then—who used to own the land Kingston now stands on. He was a stiff old chap, was Beeston; and when that French scoundrel tried to repeat his infernal tactics at Carlisle bay, Beeston was down on him with the militia, and wiped him off the island, by Jove, leaving seven hundred of his cutthroats dead behind him."

"By the way, colonel," said I, after a pause, "wasn't it that same DuCasse who afterwards defeated your Admiral Benbow in these same waters?"

The colonel was obviously taken by surprise; he had no notion that I knew that. He hummed and hawed, frowned and bristled; but there was no getting round history. "Oh, Benbow! Fine old chap, Benbow; but rather a duffer, I fancy. Oh, well, it was a long time ago, that; a long time ago. Charles! bring us two more, do you hear! and jump, now!"

"Yassah, Massa Cunl, sah!" responded Charles, and vanished with the glasses and an indulgent smile.

Col. Enderby had been an honored resident of Jamaica for twenty years or more; he came here with a brilliant reputation, won in the Indian mutiny. He was the owner of several estates on the island and was on a round of visits to them, and had invited me to take a seat in his carriage. We were at this moment sitting on the veranda of one of them, a little way up a mountain side, enjoying the air of the late afternoon and a most delicious prospect of sea and coast.

During the pause that followed the order given to Charles my eyes were caught by a ship some miles distant in the offing. She added the needed touch of human interest to the view, and I watched her proceedings with pleased and idle attention.

"What sort of a craft do you call that, colonel?" I asked, at length. "She looks to me more like a Chinese junk than anything."

"Eh? Oh—that? Chinese junk, eh! Well—hardly! She is a queer-looking affair, though. Where's the telescope? Charles! Where the deuce has that rascal—oh, gone after the . . . . Why doesn't he get back? Charles!"

"Yassah, massa," said Charles, reappearing with what he had been sent for and the same charitable smile.

"Humph! Fetch me the telescope, Charles."

"Tel'scope? Yessah!"

"By Jove, she's an odd fish—a very odd fish!" muttered the colonel, after a prolonged scrutiny through the instrument. "I can't say that I quite . . . . See what you make of her."

I took the glass and looked. I am more familiar with ships than with the early history of Jamaica; but this vessel came under no category I was acquainted with. She was not a large boat—under two hundred tons, I should say—and her lines were peculiar and rather awkward; she was high in the bows and in the stern, after the fashion of the ships we see in old marine paintings, and her spars and rigging, also, had a very antique look. She resembled a Chinese junk more than anything; but there were differences; she was painted black, which no Chinese junk ever was, that I heard of; and her sails were of canvas, much torn and defaced. Besides, what should a Chinese junk be doing here?

"There's a reef out thereabouts," remarked the colonel. "If she isn't careful, she'll find it out!"

"She appears to be sailing without any wind," said I. "She's well manned; I should think there might be fifty or sixty men on board. And they're working as if their lives depended on it. But either they're very awkward, or that fellow on the poop, with the red cap on—or is it a red feather in his hat?—doesn't know what he's about. He can't intend to come ashore here; and yet that's just what he seems to be doing."

"He's a duffer; he might be a Frenchman, by the way he behaves," said the colonel, resuming the glass. "They're an outlandish-looking gang, sure enough, those chaps are; look as if they might be the remains of some of DuCasse's pirates, kept alive for their sins," he added with a chuckle. "Recollect I came across some legend to that effect, in a manuscript chronicle in my collection, the other day. I'll look it up. By Jove, that red-feathered fellow is bound to the deuce, sure enough! And how he manages to move in the dead calm, at that rate, is beyond me. He must be the Flying Dutchman! He'll be high and dry on the reef in ten minutes, whoever he is!"

"He's caught in some current, I suppose," said I.

"Confound this light!" growled the colonel; "it's failing us just when we want it."

In fact, the sun was setting; and, as our outlook was towards the southeast, the shadow of the gigantic Blue Peak was thrown upon that part of the offing where the ship was. She was merged in it, and it was no longer possible to distinguish what was going forward on her decks. It seemed that the sheets were hauled aft, as if to take advantage of a breeze imperceptible to us; but the effect was to head the vessel directly towards the reef, from which she now seemed to be but a few hundred yards distant. On she came, the water rippling from her bluff bows, and rising and sinking slowly on the long swell. She was moving obliquely relative to us, her port side being half turned to us. Now a long line of white surf broke almost under her nose.

"By Jove, there she goes!" cried the colonel, jumping to his feet excitedly. "He's done it!"

As he spoke her forward part was uplifted by a roller and came down heavily on the reef. The shock caused her main topmast to break short off at the cap, and it hung down amidst a tangle of cordage. Meanwhile, unless my eyes deceived me, a flag was run up to her mizzen; but it was too dusky to distinguish what device it bore.

"THERE SHE GOES," CRIED THE COLONEL.

Tropical twilights are short; and almost at the moment the ship struck the air seemed to become perceptibly darker. Probably a cloud had passed across the west. On the horizon to the southeast, however, a mass of cloudy vapor was beautifully lighted up by the reflections of the sunset splendor and colored with tints of exquisite delicacy. It moulded itself into various similitudes of form, and finally took that of an antique vessel very much resembling the one on the reef—a gigantic ghost of a ship, which glowed with phantom fire through its portholes, and finally vanished in a pillar of gray, diaphanous smoke.

The practical and energetic colonel doubtless did not witness this picturesque ornament of the scene. His mind was full of the actual situation down there on the reef; and though he had so vigorously denounced the stupidity of the "red-feathered chap," and even gone so far as to accuse him of Frenchiness, he now began to consider plans for succor.

"Why don't he show any lights, though?" he muttered. "Has he the idea that he has come ashore on an uninhabited island?"

"If he has been cruising about since 1694, possibly he has run out of his stock of rockets and candles?" I suggested.

"Do you see any signs of his putting off a boat?" continued the warrior. "He's got boats, for I noticed a couple of them before the light failed. Why, what the deuce ails him? Anybody would think that every man-jack of 'em had been struck dead by the same blow that stove in her bottom."

Indeed, there was not a sign of life on board the questionable stranger; she lay dark and inert, as if she were the wreck of generations ago. Not so much as the flash of a lantern or the report of a gun came from her. And yet, a minute ago, her decks had been a-swarm with life.

"What do you make out of it—eh?" demanded the colonel, chafing under his perplexity.

"The case strikes me as very simple," I replied. "She is, as you say, a sort of Flying Dutchman affair. She has been doomed for a certain number of years or centuries to sail the seas that witnessed her crimes; and to-night her season of earthly purgatory has expired. Her crew, who of course were simply dead bodies animated by demons, having navigated her to the point she started from, have now taken flight to their own abode—"

Here the colonel interrupted me with an indignant snort.

"Jesting is all very well," quoth he; "but what's to be done about those poor devils down on the reef? It may come on a storm before morning, and every mother's son of 'em be drowned before our eyes. I'll tell you what it is; if they haven't sent on shore to communicate with us by the time we're through with our dinner, I shall take a boat and go out to see what's up, in person. That's what I shall do! Would you care to accompany me?"

"Nothing would please me better. I have always wanted to board a phantom ship, colonel, and there is no man whom I would prefer to yourself for my companion in such an adventure."

The colonel growled, called for Charles, ordered him to have dinner as soon as possible, and gave him further instructions relative to our proposed expedition.

Fortunately for our purpose, the night turned out perfectly fine and still, and there was a moon, which rose just about the time we were ready to embark on our trip—between eight and nine o'clock. We had driven down from the colonel's house, some two or three miles, over a rough road, in a single-seated buggy; on arriving at the beach we found the faithful Charles awaiting us.

"Has the fellow made any signs of life yet?" demanded the colonel, as his servant helped him to alight.

"No, Massa Cun'l, sah," Charles replied. "Dey's like as if dey wus gone to sleep, sah. De boys here, dey don' like it, sah; say it ain't right, an' I was 'bliged for to promise 'em extra pay to take us out, sah."

"Ah, the rascals! Let them alone not to lose a chance of turning a penny! So, the crew out yonder's asleep, are they? Well, we'll wake 'em before long. Push off, give way, there, and be lively!"

The rowers—there were four of them—bent to their oars, and we swept out into the still lagoon, the rising moon sending her level rays into our faces from the left, and the end of the colonel's big cigar glowing beneath his grim mustache. Owing to the position of the moon, it was difficult to discern anything of the ship, which lay upwards of two miles out; she was a shadow, and little more. As we advanced, a silence fell upon us; nothing was heard but the regular breathing of the men, the clip of the oars as they took the water, and the creak of the rowlocks. After we had proceeded for about twenty minutes, another sound became audible—the gentle breaking of the swell upon the reef. We were now scarce a mile away from it, and the ship was silhouetted against the whitish glisten of the sea beyond her. But no noise, no movement, no light announced that there were living beings on board. It was certainly mysterious. I glanced at the colonel, who sat with the tiller ropes grasped in his hands steering straight for the ship. His bushy eyebrows were drawn together, his square jaws were set, and he looked as if he were leading a forlorn hope right up to the enemy's guns.

"Well, what do you think of her?" said I.

"I shall hold her commander to an account for his conduct," replied the veteran. "The ocean is not my element; but I know what proper behavior is, afloat or ashore."

"It is my opinion," I pursued, "that he means to lure us on board and then cut our throats, as the final act of his two centuries of piracy."

"An officer of her majesty's service is not lured into ambuscades by coasting tramps, sir—even if he be on the retired list!" returned the colonel, with sternness. "Rest assured, I shall know how to make myself respected."

"Very respectable men have been murdered before now, especially by tramps," said I. "However, I will bring the Star-Spangled Banner to your assistance if there is any trouble; and meanwhile we will hope for the best."

Vanity

is a virtuous vice. The world is better for it. It makes men ambitious—and it makes women careful of their personal appearance. It doesn't take much money to keep well-dressed now-a-days. PLAINFIELD, N. J., JAN. 7, 1895.
FOR PLAINFIELD'S PROGRESS.

THE WEATHER.

Colder, Southwesterly Winds Shifting to Northwesterly.

Westfield has adopted a sewer-construction plan differing from Plainfield's. Plainfield first buries thousands of dollars worth of pipe in the streets, and takes her time about picking out land for disposal beds. Westfield believes that the outlet should be provided before the pipes are laid. Therefore she has bought the Zabriskie 100-acre farm, paid $10,000 for it, and will now go ahead and construct her sewers and operate them as fast as built. Westfield is wide-awake in this matter as in all.

Those intelligent and enterprising young men of the High School who have taken up the study of newspapers will find a fruitful field for their investigations. There is no nobler nor more important profession than that of newspapermen; and Plainfield, which has already provided the world with shining examples of the genius, perhaps holds in these students genus even greater. The Press salutes the students in journalism, and is proud of their recognition of its own worth as an entertainer and educator.

It was Plainfield's proud privilege to claim Julian Hawthorne, famous son of a famous father, as one of her people, during his residence in the romantic house on the Scotch Plains road to Springfield, and he was one of the familiar figures of her streets. Plainfielders have therefore a personal interest in him, and in his writings, even aside from their intrinsic worth. In his latest story he is faithful to his own school of romance, and weaves a fanciful tale around an ancient vessel, peopled with dead men and a live baby. He calls it "A Mystery of the Caribbean", and in developing that mystery has made a story worth reading. Like all the newest stories by the favorite writers, it has been copyrighted to Daily Press use, and today The Press gives the first instalment. The best literature of the day is found in The Daily Press, and in no other paper in Plainfield, and readers of The Press have no need of other newspaper, magazine or periodical. Hawthorne's "Mystery" will be succeeded by a story of brilliancy from the fascinating pen of Harriet Prescott Spofford, entitled "The Beauxlieux Diamonds". People are still re-reading and talking about the two tales recently published in The Press, by Ruth McEnery Stuart and Frank R. Stockton. The former's "Arkansaw Prophet" was as pathetic and pretty a story as ever melted human heart, and Stockton's "Moses and Aaron" was full of his own quaint and irrepressible humor. Be sure to read the "Mystery" now running, and watch out for "The Beauxlieux Diamonds". And there are others coming.

SHE WANTED A BRACELET.

And After She Got It She Lost Her High Opinion of It.

Mme. Doz, vivacious and petite, desired nothing for the tenth anniversary of her marriage day so much as a bracelet.

She wanted a bracelet, not a bracelet of silver, but of gold, if you please, and of double width, a regular horse's bit sort of bracelet, with heavy, thick links. Only the trouble was that it was expensive, and Hippolyte, her husband, shook his head.

Mme. Doz was on pins and needles. When they went out together she stopped him before all the jewelers' shops.

"Oh, look at this one!" she would say. "No, not that little one—it is very vulgar; I mean the larger one. Go in and find out the price, my dear, will you? That does not bind us to anything."

And when he reappeared confused and stammered: "They want one hundred dollars," she replied, with conviction: "Oh, that is not too dear."

Then she added: "You'll buy that bracelet for me, won't you dear? If you don't buy it for our tenth year of married life, you know, I shall be ill and so bad. I shall think that you no longer love me. Indeed, I think now that you don't care for me very much since you show so little eagerness to give me pleasure."

One morning walking round her room in her dressing gown, Fancy said to him, with a serious expression on her face:

"And what if I contributed to the purchase of the bracelet; if I give you part of the money what would you say then?"

He opened his eyes with astonishment.

"Ah! I am wrong," she sighed. "I have saved all this money, sou by sou, in my housekeeping. I economized ten sous here and two francs there, and I meant that you should never know it. But I am too good natured, too foolish, too weak!"

"O, there it is!" cried Fancy. "Look at it! Is it not real beautiful? How it glitters! Let us go in! Only you are not going to buy it, you are not going to say anything, but just let me make the bargain."

She went into the shop. Mme. Doz asked to see the bracelet. She fastened it on her wrist, looked at it lovingly, felt the weight, caressed the polish and played with it so prettily that even the jeweler, a fat florid man, felt the charm of the little woman and favored her with his best amiable smile.

She expected to gain something by this little seduction, and she asked:

"How much is this bracelet, monsieur, eighty dollars?"

"One hundred and ten," he replied, in a low, insinuating tone.

"That's too dear."

"She looked at Hippolyte perplexed.

"It is—a little expensive—yes," murmured the husband, "but—if it gives you pleasure—why—"

His face wore the resigned, unhappy expression of a man who is thinking.

"Well, then," she said, decisively, "I will keep it. Pay up, old boy."

He took out his purse and looked at her.

"Ah, oui; it is true, you have not got enough," and she took slowly out of her pocket a little pocketbook and took thirty dollars from it.

"Eh, bien! are you satisfied?"

"Yes, my darling!" she cried, with emotion. "How good you are! I would embrace you if you were not in the street."

Five minutes later she stopped in front of a well-lighted window and examined the bracelet.

"Curious," she said. "I thought it was larger. Is it really the same one we looked at last night?"

"Certainly, my dear, it is."

At dinner she said: "Then you really do think it is beautiful?" she asked.

"Yes; and you?"

"I—oh, I am quite satisfied—quite—only I thought it was a little larger, that's all."

Then, with the fire of a new wish in her eyes, she added:

"For the next anniversary of our marriage, in another ten years, I want a ring of diamonds, with a pearl in the center—a large one like a pea.

"It is so amusing to wish for things."

AN ALMOST MIRACULOUS CURE.

The Statement of Mr. Edward Teel, Jr., of Dunellen, N. J.

TO THE PUBLIC:

From a sense of duty I desire to call public attention to the almost miraculous cure which Dr. Lighthill effected in the case of my wife. For eleven years she had been afflicted with piles of an unusual severe and distressing character. She suffered every day of her life the most intense pain, attended with frequent and profuse hemorrhage. This state of things debilitated her entire system until she became a perfect wreck of her former self.

We made every effort to obtain a cure but they all resulted in bitter disappointment, although a number of physicians of excellent reputations for skill in that direction had treated her case. She grew worse and worse all the time, the pain became perfectly unbearable and I felt she could not bear the strain of her condition much longer. In this extremity, a friend of mine, Mr. W. E. Dilts, a resident of Roselle, N. J., a passenger conductor on the New Jersey Central told me that he had been similarly affected, and had been permanently cured by Dr. Lighthill, after other medical skill had failed. He assured me that the doctor would cure my wife, no matter how severe her case may be, and his prediction proved perfectly correct. In spite of her desperate condition, Dr. Lighthill, I am glad to say, has effected a complete and perfect cure in her case, and has given her new life.

Since the cure has been effected she has gained in health and strength and is so improved in appearance that her friends scarcely recognize her. They all consider her cure as almost miraculous, and Dr. Lighthill's praise is heard on every side. Our gratitude to Dr. Lighthill is unbounded and we only hope that other sufferers may be benefited by this publication.

A Flattering Testimonial from Colonel John Dietrich, One of Plainfield's Oldest and Best Known Residents.

16 ARLINGTON PLACE,
Plainfield, N. J., July 17, 1894.

I am profoundly grateful to Dr. Lighthill for his speedy and radical cure of a most painful malady of over ten years standing with which I was afflicted.

I deem it proper to say to all afflicted to place themselves under the care of this skilful physician and be permanently cured.

I will cheerfully impart any information I possess when called upon.

JOHN DIETRICH.

Mr. Thomas Callahan of No. 214 Richmond street Cured of a Very Distressing Trouble by Dr. Lighthill.

PLAINFIELD, N. J., June 1, 1894.

TO THE PUBLIC:

For some time past I have been greatly distressed with noises in the head. They were all over my head and troubled me constantly; they were loudest at night when everything was quiet and at such times would often keep me from sleep and disturb my rest. In fact they got to be so bad and distressing that they affected my whole nervous system as well as my health. I did not obtain the least relief until I placed myself under the care of Dr. Lighthill, of No. 132 Crescent avenue, who effected a complete cure in my case in a short time and made me a very happy man.

THOMAS CALLAHAN,

A Card From Mr. T. R VanZandt,

of Nos. 304 and 306 Park ave.,

Plainfield, N. J

I certify with pleasure that Dr. Lighthill has effectually cured me of a most painful case of piles. For some time past I had been subject to its attacks, but the last attack was so exceedingly painful that it completely upset my whole system. The pain extended to my legs and in many other directions, and made me so nervous that I could neither sleep, sit down, lie down or move about without serious discomfort and distress. Such was my condition when I applied to Dr. Lighthill for relief, and I am glad to say that as soon as he took hold of my case, I began to improve, and in a short time found myself completely cured. Dr. Lighthill has also effected a radical and permanent cure in a most terrible case of piles on my cousin, Mr. J. V. Z Griggs, of Rocky Hill, N. J., whose flattering testimonial is in Dr. Lighthill's possession.

THE AMERICAN WIZARD.

Edison Tells of the Possibilities of the Kinetoscope.

In no country in the world is a man of genius in any direction more honored or appreciated than in America. It could hardly be otherwise, since the people are not only intelligent and thoughtful, but personally interested in questions relating to public life and policy, and to those improvements which add a convenience to business or a comfort to a home.

What a change has come over the face of the earth since the telegraph gave us instant communication with all parts of the world! What would the man of business say if by some sudden catastrophe all the cable lines beneath the ocean should be destroyed and he were compelled to wait anywhere from fourteen to sixteen days while his letter is going to London and the answer is coming back? At the present moment he sends his cable message, lights a cigar, reads his morning paper, and by the time the last puff of smoke has disappeared he gets his answer.

And what a change in all the affairs of life the telephone has effected! To the business of the country it has been an addition too valuable to be computed. We did get on somehow without it, before we knew such a thing was possible, but we certainly could not get on without it now that we have become accustomed to the advantage it offers.

As to the kinetoscope and its possible combination with other instruments, Mr. Edison says:

In the year 1887 the idea occured to me that it was possible to devise an instrument which should do for the eye what the phonograph does for the ear, and by a combination of the two all motion and sound could be recorded and reproduced simultaneously. This idea, the germ of which came from the little toy called the zoetrope, and the work of Muybridge, Maree and others, has now been accomplished, so that every change of facial expression can be recorded and reproduced life size. The kinetoscope is only a small model, illustrating the present stage of progress, but with each succeeding month new possibilities are brought into view.

I believe that in coming years, by my own work and that of Dickson, Muybridge, Maree and others who will doubtless enter the field, grand opera can be given at the Metropolitan Opera House of New York without any material change from the original, and with artists and musicians long since dead."

That is at least very interesting. It is a dream worth dreaming, and we will have to be satisfied with the music of the spheres while our grandchildren will listen to the phantom artists and the phantom music of our day.

Is the time coming when steam will be supplanted by electricity, when we shall either take balloon trips from Atlantic to Pacific, or fasten on a pair of wings and spend the hot summer days astride a cloud, when the horse will have become as scarce as the buffaloes are, and when—but it tires the imagination. We shall simply have a new heavens and a new earth, and such men as Edison will have the credit of inaugurating the era of magic.

DEATH THAT IS NOT REAL.

The Liability of Physicians to Err Concerning It.

"Except where a surgical operation is performed, the only absolute sign of death is the decomposition of the body," said a physician during a conversation on the proposed method of reviving criminals who have suffered in the electric chair.

"I have had cases of apparent death in my practice. An urgent message from the physician in charge called me one night to a young ladies' seminary in New York city. As I ascended the stairs to the patient's room I was met by the housekeeper, who, between her sobs, could only say:

"'It is too late, doctor; she is dead.'

"I went up to the room, nevertheless. There upon the bed lay a young girl of about 18. Her face bore the mask of death.

"'I am sorry to have troubled you at this hour,' the doctor said. 'The heart stopped beating about five minutes ago.'

"I bent over and listened at the chest; no respiration, no beating of the heart was to be heard. While I listened some one said:

"'I always thought she would go off in one of those attacks.'

"These words were a revelation to me, and I hastily threw off my coat and began artificial respiration. Little by little there was a change of expression in the face; the features relaxed, the eyes appeared less sunken, the face became flushed, the eyelids moved, and after a full hour of constant work the life of youth returned. The girl had had an attack of grave hysteria. She is now married and the mother of three handsome children.

"Do I think that people are often buried alive? Yes, I do; perhaps oftener than we imagine. Life may exist without being evident; but non-evidence of life is not proof of death. If ever we are able to discover the moment when death substitutes itself certainly for life, we shall have solved a problem which has occupied the philosophers of all times and all countries.

"One of my professional friends tells me of a providential escape from premature burial which occurred in his practice:

"'I attended a little girl of three,' he says, 'up to the time when in my own judgment and that of the parents and all present the child was dead. Being assured of this, I went home; but two hours later, in the evening, I returned to the house, being concerned about the mother, to whom the death of the child had been a great blow. The father was busy writing, informing friends of their loss. On leaving the room where the parents were, I passed in front of the little one's bed. My look fell for an instant upon the little face, when I thought that I noticed an almost imperceptible movement of the sheet that covered the body.

"'The cheeks were hard and cold, the conjunctiva insensible, the pupils completely insensible to light. I should not have dared affirm that the slight movement which I had seen came from the body, and yet I believed that my little patient was not dead. I have never been able to explain how that phenomenon was produced; I do not attempt to explain it, but the one thing certain is that the child was considered dead, that she was enshrined for the tomb, and that she is to-day in very good health.'"

Young Lady (tailor made)—Take my seat please.

Old Lady (near sighted, but grateful)—Thank you, sir. You are the only gentleman in the car.—Tit Bits.

FAITH CURES IN AUSTRALIA.

Two Patients Near Death Who Were Saved by Water and Imagination.

Some interesting experiments have recently been made with the faith cure in Australia. Dr. W. J. Barkas, a physician of Sydney, who, while no an enthusiastic believer in faith cure, has some confidence in it, describes a couple of cures which he effected recently by merely playing on the imagination of his patients.

A well-to-do woman about 60 years of age had been suffering for years from a dozen or more imaginary ailments. She thought that every organ in her body was affected. She was continually complaining of a burning sensation in her body. She could not sleep, and she was able to take but little nourishment. The result of such a series of nervous troubles was that she worried herself into a critical condition, and when Dr. Barkas was called in she was in danger of death. At Dr. Barkas's suggestion massage was tried, but it did no good, and as a last resort the physician decided to use the faith cure. With great solemnity he informed his patient that death was imminent, and that she must prepare herself to meet it. Every remedy but one had been tried unsuccessfully, he said, and he regretted to use that one on account of the great danger attending it. It would kill or cure her, he said. The patient in great excitement demanded that the remedy be tried. The doctor explained that the drug he would have to use was tasteless and colorless, and looked very much like water. It must be administered by an experienced person at certain times in the day, and if taken one second before or after the stated time might cause death. The woman was all the more eager to try the remedy after this, and Dr. Barkas left her, and later in the day came in with a huge bottle of pure distilled water. At regular intervals doses of water were given to the woman, and as the days went by she began to get better. Her appetite came back, a flush appeared in the cheeks which had been pale for years, the inability to sleep disappeared, and in three weeks the woman, who had been at the point of death, had entirely recovered.

The other experiment was with a woman who was in an extreme state of emaciation from incessant vomiting. When Dr. Barkas was called in her condition was so critical that other remedies having failed, he resolved to try the faith cure. He began by telling the woman of a wonderful remedy he had for just such cases. He thus won the woman's confidence, and began the cure by making her sleep by means of hypodermic injections of morphine. The first time she slept for eight hours, which was more than she had slept on a stretch for nearly a year. The second dose he gave the woman consisted of about one-quarter the quantity of morphine used in the first injection. This time the patient slept twelve hours, and did not vomit for several hours after she woke up. The third injection consisted of water alone, and had as much effect as either of the other two. After this nothing but water was used. Gradually the vomiting grew less frequent, the patient grew stronger, and was able to take food, and in two weeks she was riding horseback, and taking all sorts of exercise. Now she is in better health than she ever was.

LOVE'S DISAPPOINTMENT.

Wedded on Thanksgiving Eve at the Age of 88, He Now Seeks Divorce.

A romantic Indiana marriage that took place here Thanksgiving eve bids fair to culminate in the wreck of the matrimonial bark. The principals to the wedding were Charles Moore, a Monroe county farmer, aged 88 years, and Mrs. Amanda Pierce of Kokomo aged 64. They have not lived together since the ceremony, and the groom has applied for a divorce.

The couple in early childhood, were lovers, high spirited, strong willed, and stubborn, a characteristic that remains with them yet to a remarkable degree. A lover's quarrel and separation by removal threw their lives in different paths. Both married other companions, reared large families, and accumulated a goodly share of this world's goods in the half century that has since passed. A few years ago, their consorts were removed by death. Later the lovers of fifty years ago met again. The old flame was rekindled and it culminated in a wedding, the ceremony being at the home of the bride Thanksgiving day.

The nuptials over, the venerable groom returned to his 1,200 acre farm, near Bloomington, and the bride began packing her goods to follow. Then she changed her mind. She concluded that it was not the proper thing for her to leave her children and grandchildren so far away and informed the groom that he must come to Kokomo and live with her. This turn of affairs did not suit Mr Moore. He had the household all prepared for its new mistress, and contented that he could not afford to comply with her request; that his business interests would suffer thereby, and finally informed her that if she wanted to live with him she must come to his home. The bride refused to comply, and the piqued groom brought matters to a focus by filing an application for divorce in the Monroe county courts.

He Was.

A dudish looking youth was walking down the Bowery, looking in at the shop windows. A Bowery sport, intent on having fun with him, tapped him on the shoulder and said:

"Say, young feller, are yer wid me or ag'in me?"

"I'm wid you and ag'in you and onto you," replied the dudish looking youth, and when they picked up the Bowery sport and carried him away he looked as if he had mistaken a cable car for an all-night owl lunch wagon.

Mr. Goodman—My poor man, you seem despondent. You are out of employment, no doubt. But cheer up, the time will soon come when you will find yourself working, and——

Weary Weeks (interrupting)—Dat is wot worries me, boss. I struck as many as er dozen people ter day widout gettin' a cent, an' if business don't pick up I'll hev ter go to work. I can't see no way out of it."—Brooklyn Life.

Taken by Surprise.

Cousin Jane—Did you stay up late Christmas eve?"

Jack—Yes; brother Bobby and I lay awake, and about 11 o'clock we heard the door open, and in came Santa Claus; up jumped Bobby and I, and grabbed him. Who do you think it was?

Cousin Jane—Santa Claus, of course.

Jack—No, it was papa.—Chicago Record.

HAWAIIAN DISCUSSION

Likely To Occupy the Senate's Attention To-Day.

Provided Mr. Lodge Is Able to Carry Out His Programme—Urgency Deficiency Bill May Possibly Consume the Balance of the Week—Currency Bill in the House.

Washington, Jan. 7.—The present week in the senate will probably be remarkable more for that which it will fail to accomplish than for anything that may be done. The most significant feature will be the precipitation of the debate that will grow out of the proposition in the urgency deficiency bill for the collection of the income tax. This will not come up, however, until well toward the latter part of the week.

There will be a continuance of the incidental Hawaiian discussion growing out of the resolution of Mr. Lodge, requesting the president to inform the senate why this government has withdrawn our ships from Hawaiian waters, provided Mr. Lodge and those acting in concert with him are able to carry out their programme.

It is rather expected in administration circles that a batch of Hawaiian correspondence, now awaiting transmission to congress, will negative some of the points made in the debate as to the attitude of Great Britain.

On the third of this month Mr. Peffer gave notice that he would to-day, after the routine business, call up for consideration senate bill granting a service pension to soldiers and sailors of the war of the rebellion, and this may, to a small extent, antagonize Mr. Lodge's resolution. There is a well grounded belief, however, that Mr. Lodge will succeed in continuing the debate which he on Friday characterized as a "stunning success."

The Nicaragua canal bill, which seems to be doomed to interminable debate, still remains on the calendar as the unfinished business, and Mr. Mitchell of Oregon has the floor to address the senate on the subject.

But little business will be transacted to-morrow for immediately after the morning hour the senate will listen to speeches on the memory of the late Senator Colquitt of Georgia.

The urgency deficiency bill will probably be reported on Wednesday, and once up for consideration a debate will commence that will continue through the greater part of the week.

The debate that will begin the moment Mr. Cockrell calls up the deficiency bill will be interesting and lively.

Mr. Hill will doubtless figure to a great extent in the matter and he will have some enthusiastic followers on the other side of the chamber.

In this matter Mr. Quay, of Pennsylvania, seems to be playing the part of a free lance, as is evidenced by the amendment to the deficiency bill of which he gave notice the other day.

Mr. Quay's amendment strikes out all reference to the income tax wherever it appears in the deficiency appropriation bill and substitutes a new wool schedule. As a vehicle for debate in the hands of a man like Mr. Quay this amendment opens up a field for discussion that is practically inexhaustible.

The determination of the programme of business in the house this week will depend on the outcome of the democratic caucus held to-day. The conditions under which the currency bill shall be further considered, and whether, indeed, it shall be considered at all, are matters that cannot be foretold.

It is the impression among democratic members that the bill will ultimately be passed, but the outlook is foggy. It is the opinion of a member of the committee on rules, expressed on Saturday, that general debate on the bill will close with the end of to-day's session, prior to the holding of the caucus.

In case the caucus should do what is unexpected and decide against the passage of the bill, the time of the house can be engaged with the consideration of appropriation bills.

THE DEADLY CURRENT AGAIN.

Horrible Death of a Silk Weaver in Camden, N. J.

Camden, N. J., Jan. 7.—For half an hour last evening a helpless and horrified crowd stood on Tenth street below Carpenter and watched the full force of an electric light current passed through the dead body of a man who had been killed by stepping upon a live wire. While Harry Schaeffer, a young silk weaver, was walking along Tenth street he stepped upon a broken electric light wire that was trailing on the pavement. As the shock of the current passed through him Schaeffer threw up his hands and fell to the pavement crying out: "My God, won't some one lift me up."

In falling Schaeffer was thrown upon a mass of broken telephone wires that had been left lying in the street since the recent storm, and his feet remaining across the live wire, his body completed the circuit and the current constantly passed through him into the heap of wire. A crowd speedily gathered, but no one dared go to the man's assistance.

As the current passed through the body it distorted the features into horrible grimaces and the terror-stricken spectators were uncertain whether the man was alive or dead. After an hours delay the current was finally turned off and the body was picked up.

The first shock undoubtedly killed the man and he felt no pain after he fell to the pavement. The soles of his shoes were burned through and his face where it had rested against the wires was burned to the bone.

JAPAN IS AFTER PEKIN

Peace Terms To Be Withheld Until She Has That City.

Landing Parties Busy Exploring the Bays on the Coast of Shantung—Advices from Tokio by Steamer China—Emperor Kwang Su Ready To Flee at a Moment's Notice.

London, Jan. 7.—A dispatch from Pekin says that the Chinese envoy to negotiate for peace with Japan had a farewell audience with the emperor on Friday. Japan refuses to grant an armistice. Mr. Denby, the American minister, believes that the negotiations will be fruitless.

The Japanese will withhold their terms for peace until they shall have occupied Pekin. Japanese landing parties are busy exploring the bays on the east coats of the province of Shantung.

Tokio, Dec. 21, via San Francisco, Jan. 7.—There seems to be little doubt that Emperor Kwang Su has conferred on Gen. Von Hanneken, a commission such as no foreigner ever before held in the middle kingdom. Hanneken is said to have been placed in such a position that he has direct access to the throne. He is empowered to raise and equip an army competent to defend the empire and to fill its upper ranks with European officers. The rumor alleges that he is engaged in procuring several hundreds of his compatriots from Germany and that German arsenals will be found willing to supply all necessary war material on credit, trusting to be recouped when peace is restored.

Viceroy Li recently submitted to the throne a most imposing statement of the military bulwarks surrounding the throne. It appears that his majesty, Kwang Su, rendered solicitous for the safety of his capitol by constantly arriving reports of Japanese victories asked the great earl what measures had been adopted to check the final advance of the foe. Earl Li's report shows that half a million of men are under arms to protect the capitol. Nevertheless Kwang Su has packed up his trunks and is ready to fly at a moments notice.

What is known as the strong foreign policy party in Japan command a majority of the votes in the lower house of the diet, and are the government's opponents. These men stand in the way to a moderate settlement of the quarrel between their country and China and it is scarcely possible that any terms of peace acceptable to China will satisfy these politicians. But the government will not be guided by them. It will make such a compromise as shall vindicate Japan's moderation without sacrificing her titles.

On the 16th of November, Major General Oseko, who had been ordered to move from Taku Shan to the assault of Sui Yen, reached the latter place at the head of two battalions. Co-operating with him was another column that had marched from Feng Hwan to take the enemy in the rear, and so accurately timed were the movements of the two forces that the enemy finding itself assailed from two sides, retreated without offering any effective resistance, but in good order, in the direction of Hai Cheng. The Japanese on their side, having placed a garrison in Sui Yen, withdrew their battalions to Taku Shan and Feng Hwan, their intention being to postpone any further advance westward until the successful operations of the second army against Talien and Port Arthur should set it free to march north and co-operate with the first army. That involved a delay of about two weeks. In the beginning of December the westward movement was resumed. It had been ascertained that Tomucheng, a town 18 miles southeast of Hai Cheng, was occupied by the enemy in considerable strength. Tomucheng lies at the junction of two roads, one coming from Feng Hwan (70 miles distant). The main body of the Japanese division moved by the latter road and two battalions under Major General Oseko striking northward from Sui Yen, marched by the Feng Hwan road. On December 11, the enemy's most advanced post (Tao Hotsz) on the Sui Yen road was reached. Its force, consisting of three thousand infantry and four hundred cavalry, with eight guns, was driven back after a brief resistance. Next day another body of 4,500 strong with six guns, was dislodged from its position (Po-Tsao-Ho-Den), three or four miles further on, and Japanese following up their advantage, took possession of Tomucheng on the same afternoon. Meanwhile, Major General Oseko, on the other road, had defeated a force stationed 13 miles from Tomucheng at Panchia-Paotsz, and the two wings entered Tomucheng almost simultaneously, having had only seven men wounded in the two days operations, against 104 killed and wounded on the enemy's side. Thence they advanced together on the following day and at 11 a. m., Hai Cheng was in their possession. Its garrison was found to consist of only 1,500 men, who, after a show of resistance retired in the direction of Lao Yang. There were no casualties on the Japanese side in the capture of Hai Cheng and the enemy's loss is not yet ascertained.

The occupation of Hai Cheng is of considerable strategical importance. It places the Japanese on the high road from New Hwang to Moukden. It falls within the range of possibilities that Moukden may be captured within the next three weeks.

By this time we were close on to the reef. The ship had struck at high tide, and lay with one-half her hull across it. Nothing more convenient for our purpose could have been arranged. We lay in still water under the lea of the reef, the top of which was now bare; and all we had to do was to clamber out on it, get a line from over the ship's side, and go aboard.

"Way enough!" called out the colonel; "stern all! Look out, forward there! Now, then, we'll have a word with this chap. Ship ahoy!"

The hail was stentorian; it might have been heard back at our point of embarkation; but it produced not a whisper of response from the vessel. The situation did not strike me as being entirely agreeable. It was picturesque and impressive, but not inviting. There were the loneliness of the the quiet, moonlit sea, the limpid beauty of the night, the gentle sucking sound of the waves as they lifted and subsided about the reef, and the shadow-like mountains piling themselves aloft to the north—they seemed very far away just then! Close beside us, overhanging our heads, were the black sides of the unaccountable ship, a sort of grotesque marine catafalque, containing no one could tell what; so lately full of life and bustle, and now as deadly still as a veritable tomb. What did it mean, or portend? What in the name of mystery had become of its late occupants? They could not have got away; they had been under observation from the time the ship first hove in sight; and yet they could not be on board, unless . . . The alternative was the thing that I have described as uninviting. If that swarm of men were on board, lurking in such breathless silence within a few feet of where we were sitting, there was difficulty in persuading one's self that their conduct boded us any good. On the other hand, of course, it was scarcely less difficult to imagine what benefit they could expect from doing us any harm. Here they were, hard and fast on the reef, at the mercy not only of a change in the weather, but of the inhabitants of the island. They must be aware that our visit could be intended only in their interest. All the same, I do not mind saying that my most urgent longing at that moment did not take the form of a craving to clamber up the ship's side and find out what was going on there.

As for the colonel, it is the business of warriors not to know what fear is; and in his case there was the added consideration that he felt—whether reasonably or not matters little—that her Britannic majesty was being slighted in his person. At all events, I am able to affirm that, to all appearances, the only effect upon my friend of this ghastly unresponsiveness on the part of the ship's company was to develop in him a wrath, the fiery quality of which was but feebly symbolized by the glow of the cigar which was gripped between his teeth. He repeated his hail twice; and then, turning to me, with the deadly calm of one who has passed beyond the point where demonstrations of any sort can adequately express his emotions, he said, in the softest tones I had ever heard him use: "I think I'll just step aboard and make a few inquiries. Will you remain here, or—"

If I had been an Englishman, or even a negro, I think I might have been prevailed upon to let that gallant gentleman have all the fun to himself; but, as I had the honor of the Stars and Stripes in my keeping, at least as much as he had that of the lion and the unicorn in his, I at once replied, in a loud and cheerful tone: "Remain here? Well, not if I know myself! I came out here to see these fellows, and you can bet your life, Col. Enderby, I am not going ashore again without having done it!"

"Ah! then have the kindness to follow me," said he, in the same unnaturally silky voice. He stepped out on the surface of the reef, and I followed him. It was only a few inches above the water, and was both rough and slippery. We trod on limpets and sea-urchins, and slimy strips of seaweed twined themselves about our ankles. Something that looked to me like the fin of a gigantic shark moved to and fro in the water a few yards off.

"Charles," said the colonel, "hand me out that lantern." Charles did so. "Charles," continued his master, "you will remain here until my return. You are not to come on board unless I summon you. (I thought it highly probable that Charles would observe this injunction.) Keep the boat about where she is—(Suppose, thought I, these fellows should take it into their heads to scuttle off as soon as our backs are turned: what then?)—and let no one presume to leave his place, or indulge in any laughter or horse-play during my absence."

Charles undertook to restrain any undue hilarity. Indeed, the countenances and bearing of the men did not seem to me to betray any strong desire to break forth in careless mirth, to troll jovial tavern catches or to leap out on the reef and indulge in a breakdown; but the light was dim, and I may have been mistaken.

"And now, I believe we are ready," added the colonel, with a courteous inclination in my direction.

"I am certainly," returned I, with the air of one who has too long been chafing under inaction; and we turned to the ship.

As luck would have it, the cordage appertaining to the topmast, which was snapped off at the time the ship struck, was dangling over the side not far from where we stood; and a fragment of rat-line served us in place of a rope ladder. The colonel, in spite of my efforts, politely but firmly insisted on preceding me, and ascended with remarkable agility for a man of his years.

I felt that the eyes of the boatmen and of Charles were upon me. I sprang lightly after him, my head nearly coming in contact with his boot-soles, and in a moment we stood together on the deck. Yes, there we stood; and still alive!

We glanced forward and aft. Nothing resembling a human figure was in sight. In the shadow of the high bulwarks, however, and along the sides of the deck-houses, I discerned several dark objects lying like rolls of sail-cloth, or heaps of spare rigging. Upon one of these heaps, the colonel flashed the light of his lantern.

"Eh?—why, what the deuce—" he muttered. He inspected another heap to his right; then still another, further forward. "Asleep?—or drunk?—or—" He stopped; we looked at each other and the tension of my nerves came very near relieving itself by an altogether inopportune fit of laughter.

The colonel, after a pause, deliberately knelt on one knee on the deck, beside one of the heaps, and held the lantern close to the whitish appearance at one end of it. Then he put his hand upon it. Then he arose rather hurriedly and said to me:

"Dead, by Jove! and dry as last year's cocoa-nut into the bargain!"

"Dry?" I repeated with a peculiar shudder. "Dry?—what do you mean?"

"The man is a mummy—that's what I mean," returned the colonel. "He's skin and bone; he might have been dead a thousand years. And to judge from the clothes he has on," he added, throwing the light over the costume of the corpse, "he ought not to have been alive for the last two hundred years, anyway!"

"DEAD, BY JOVE!"

Prompted by a curiosity yet stronger than my horror, I bent over the remains and examined them closely. They were those of a man—or of what had once been one—of a rugged and brutal aspect, deeply tanned by the scorching of countless suns, seamed with old scars, and shaggy with hair that hung in masses from his skull, and clothed his gaunt visage to the eyes. The flesh, however, had dried into a thick integument of the consistency of parchment, lying close to the bony framework, and giving the impression of a figure carved from some dark colored wood. The eyes themselves had disappeared, shrunken into their sockets; the lips were like strips of cartilege, and were drawn back from the yellow teeth, giving the involuntary expression of a savage snarl.

Such was the body; the dress was like none I had ever seen before, unless in some stage extravaganza, or represented in ancient pictures. It consisted mainly of a jerkin and short breeches of some rough material, and a thick pair of boots coming up to the knee. The cut and fashion of these garments showed at a glance that they had not been made in our day, nor for many generations before; they might have been the fashion in an age when Charles Second sat on the throne of Spain, and Louis Quartoze and William of Orange on those of France and England. How, then, came they to clothe the body of a man lying on the deck of a vessel in this year 1894?

The colonel and I did not ask each other this question; we were not in the humor for speech. We continued our investigations and found the deck strewn with corpses, all more or less resembling the one I have described. They lay in all postures and places, as if stricken down suddenly where they stood by some comprehensive thunderbolt. Some had ropes still in their hands, as if they had been hauling the yards or taking in sail. All were armed with weapons of one sort or another, but none of a pattern known to modern armories. There were cutlasses, dirks, pikes and many grotesque and clumsy pistols and matchlocks, whose detonations no living ear could have heard for centuries. Here and there, in points of vantage, we found seven or eight quaint old bronze cannon, some of them richly carved and embossed.

The waist of the ship was low; the decks forward and aft were raised above the middle space to the height of a man and were reached by steep flights of steps. On the poop we discovered, leaning against the mizzen mast, the only figure on board which had kept its feet. It was the corpse of a tall man, with wide shoulders and a certain stateliness of bearing, in spite of the untoward circumstances. He wore a wide-brimmed black felt hat, ornamented with a superb great plume of scarlet feathers. His dress was rich and decorated with barbaric magnificence. His erectness was only an accident; he had been propped up in his position by his long, basket-hilted rapier, the point of which was stuck in the deck, while the hilt was caught beneath the rim of the gold-inlaid corselet that he wore. The colonel, in moving to look beneath his wide hat brim, struck the point of the rapier with his foot, whereupon down fell the dead man prone upon the deck, with a great jingle and crash of arms. The colonel, for all his steadiness, jumped back as if from a sudden attack. That was the first sound, except our own rare whispers, that had broken the deathly stillness since we had stumbled upon the first corpse.

"I recognize this chap—his red feather, at least," the colonel presently remarked, in as composed a tone as he could manage. "He's the commander, I suppose. Ahem! Well—er—I must say, this seems to me to be a—er—matter in which it is difficult to be guided by precedent. How does it strike you?"

"This ship was built and these men were born about the time the Mayflower took the Puritan Pilgrims to Plymouth Rock," said I. "You and I saw her come ashore here with a living crew four hours ago. At the moment she struck I saw a fellow run aft and haul a flag up to the mizzen peak. There he lies now, with the halliards still in his hands. Suppose we take a look at the flag. That ought to tell us something."

We walked aft, and I cut the flag halliards with my penknife. The flag came down. We spread it out on the deck, and examined it with the aid of the lantern. It was the imperial naval ensign of France in the reign of Louis XIV.

"This is not a thing we can understand, colonel," I remarked. "We must take it as it comes and make the best of it. Let us go below and investigate the cabin."

The colonel was mute; he followed me about meekly. When a thoroughly practical man—a man of action—who believes only in what he can explain by rule of thumb, chances to run across something altogether beyond the scope of common human experience, he becomes, for the time being, as helpless and docile as an infant; and a fellow who sees visions and dreams dreams, and to whom, half the time, the solid earth appears less real than his own thoughts, has him completely at advantage. So I led the doughty old warrior about at my will, and he trotted after me with an unquestioning deference that was pathetic.

I took the lantern, and went in advance. We came to the companionway; it was like the mouth of a black pit. I was not at my ease, however; like Macbeth, "direness, familiar to my thoughts, could not once move me." But just as I set foot on the first step of the descent, there came a sound from below.

It was a sort of whimpering, complaining sound, half animal and half human. It seemed to enter into my blood like atoms of ice. I was prepared for ghosts; but this was not preternatural; the terror of it was due to its being a natural manifestation in the midst of what was spectral. The colonel heard it, but so far from completing his collapse, it revived him. He drew in a long breath. "Some poor devil of a dog is down there," said he, clearing the huskiness out of his throat. "It will be a comfort to rescue him, after all this deviltry! After you, sir!"

Now I, unlike the worthy colonel, am a family man; and domestic life gives a man certain knowledges unknown to celibates. The sound had not appeared to me like the whining of a dog. But it was no use speculating; we went down.

The reader of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly on the blood and mucous surface of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer $100 for any case that it fails to cure.

ESTABLISHED MAY 10, 1887. PLAINFIELD, N. J., TUESDAY, JANUARY 8, 1895. TWO CENTS A COPY, $5 A YEAR.

A BREEZE AT THE START.

Frazee Furnishes Fun for the New Common Council.

SAUCY TO FELLOW-COMMITTEEMAN

Lively Tilt that Brings President See's Gavel into Requisition—Westphal Joins the Lonestar Democrat in Resigning from a Committee They Could Not Boss—Mutiny to the President—Frazee Finds the Session Without a Quorum, and Brings Back Absentees in Haste—Much Business Done at the Organization Meeting.

The unwonted scene of Plainfield Councilmen talking back to one another enlivened the session of the Common Council of '95, which met for organization last night. All was serenity 'till Mr. Frazee got the floor, and after his first taste of blood he was irrepressible. What he did, and what the others did, is chronicled herewith, and will be relished as the account develops.

J. T. MacMurray, Clerk of the preceding Council, called the meeting to order. Those present were Messrs. Erickson, Fisk, Frazee, Frost, Ginna, Moore, See, Stockton and Westphal. The absentees were Messrs. Bird and Dumont.

Mr. Erickson nominated Mr. See for president. Mr. Fisk seconded the nomination. The Clerk was authorized to cast the ballot for Mr. See, which he did. Mr. MacMurray named Messrs. Ginna and Erickson to escort Mr. See to the chair. On assuming his renewed honors, Mr. See said:

"I thank you for being chosen to preside over you another year. The Council is practically the same as last year, and gives assurance of friendly relations. Each year as the city grows the work becomes more burdensome. That it will be well taken care of in '95 is apparent from the personnel of the Council. I am satisfied that at the close of the year matters will be found in as good shape as when the Council of '94 transferred the municipal government to you. I again thank you for the honor you have visited upon me."

J. T. MacMurray was nominated for City Clerk. Messrs. Fisk and Frazee served as tellers, and gathered an unanimous ballot for Mr. MacMurray's re-election.

Likewise was Wm. V. Mundy re-elected janitor, and came in from an outer room bearing a stepladder as his insignia of office, with which he proceeded to assume an exalted position and restore the illuminating properties of a recalcitrant chandelier. This was rewarded a little later by his appointment as janitor of the city offices downstairs, superseding Henry Frisbee, who had been doing for $6 a month work which Mr. Fisk pronounced unsatisfactory. The wages of Janitor Mundy was put at the total of $200. Last year he drew $111.

The rules of order of the preceding Council were adopted as the rules of the new Council, and Mr. Fisk gave notice that at the next meeting he would introduce them as bylaws.

Mr. See paid a compliment to the committees of last year by reappointing them without change except the substitution of Mr. Moore for Mr. Millington, whom Mr. Moore succeeds. The list:

Alms—Ginna, Dumont, Erickson.

Auditing—Frazee, Westphal, Moore.

Fire and Buildings—Erickson, Bird, Fisk.

Finance—Dumont, Fisk, Stockton.

Laws and Ordinances—Westphal, Frost, Frazee.

License—Moore, Stockton, Westphal.

Police and Public Lights—Stockton, Moore, Dumont.

Printing and Stationery—Bird, Frazee, Frost.

Streets—Fisk, Ginna, Bird.

Water and Sewers—Frost, Erickson, Ginna.

Mr. Ginna was unanimously re-elected to succeed himself on the special sewer committee.

The Plainfield Daily Press and the Plainfield Courier-News were designated in the order named as the official papers of the city for the ensuing year.

Various petitions, legacies from the preceding Council, were presented by the Clerk, and referred to the appropriate committees.

A petition from the Plainfield Water Supply Company for needed lights on North avenue in the Netherwood district was referred to the Committee on Police and Public Lights. To the same committee was referred with power the petition for light on Dunellen avenue between Rock and Jefferson avenues. The Fire and Buildings Committee was given power to grant the application for the removal of the building at 432 West Second street to the rear of 430.

The fifth annual message of Mayor Gilbert was read, as printed in full on this page of The Daily Press, and a copy was ordered given by the Clerk to each Councilman.

A. Vanderbeek, Overseer of the Poor, submitted his annual report, detailing the work of his department in line with the annual financial statement already published in this paper, and pointing out that the present huddling together of the city's dependents was demoralizing. He urged better provision. The report was referred to the Alms Committee.

In response to the request of Chief Grant, the Police Committee was empowered to procure trousers and other supplies for the police.

The corrected bond of Constable Dennis Carney was ordered recorded when it should have been approved in form by the Corporation Counsel.

The Clerk was authorized to procure the usual supply of committee cards and roll calls. Necessary stationery and blank books were ordered through the Printing Committee.

$1,000 was ordered borrowed for use on the streets.

At this point Mr. Frazee took the floor and began a speech.

He said he wanted to protest against the action of a member of the Printing Committee in taking to New York the printing of the report on the water-supply investigation. There were—he said—two reliable printing houses in Plainfield, and he did not consider it right and just to take from them business which would go through them in wages to Plainfield workmen. He wanted it known that he was a member of the Printing Committee but that the action of that committee in this matter was without his advice or consent, and had, he understood, been done at the direction of one member of the committee, with a nod towards Mr. Frost.

In the midst of Mr. Frazee's speech Mr. Erickson suggested that the gentleman was out of order, as there was no motion before the house.

"Better let him go on!"—interposed Mr. Frost.—"But as a fact, two members of the committee settled this matter: what has he to say about it?"

"Perhaps"—was Mr. Frazee's quick retort—"I have as much as you!"

Mr. See pounded vigorously with his gavel, and the disputants took their seats, but as Mr. Frost begged that the gentleman be allowed to proceed, and as Mr. Frazee insisted on his right to be heard in this matter, the president ruled it as a question of privilege and Mr. Frazee went on to say that if the people were to be reached by the report the way to reach them was through the newspapers. He moved that the report be published in the official papers.

Mr. Frost said that the report was to be printed in pamphlet form, and that the papers had absolutely refused to have anything to do with it. They would not give a bid. He called on the editor of The Daily Press to bear him out in that.

Mr. Fisk held that this was all out of order, and moved that the motion of Mr. Frazee be tabled. The motion to table was carried with only Mr. Frazee's voice protesting, though Mr. Westphal had been his seconder.

Mr. Westphal raised the next breeze.

"I desire"—said he—"to do now what I perhaps should have done sooner, and that is to resign from the chairmanship of the Laws and Ordinance Committee, a matter I find I have no control over."

"I too positively decline to serve"—said Mr. Frazee.

President See flushed.

"That is an important committee"—he said.—"I trust the gentlemen will on second thought revoke their declinations."

"You served on the committee two years ago: didn't you?"—queried Mr. Frazee.

Mr See said Yes.

"Two years ago it was an important committee" — continued the Lonestar Democrat.—"But last year not one document was referred to that committee. I don't see the use of continuing it. I move it be abolished".

"You can talk all night and not abolish it"—retorted the President.—"It is in the rules, and they can't be changed without the consent of all the members."

Messrs. Westphal and Frazee said they would n't serve. The President said they were appointed under the rules, and they would have to abide thereby. He proceeded to call the committees for reports.

When the Committee on Printing and Stationery was reached, Mr. Frazee said: "Have n't anything to report; perhaps the other member of the committee present has"—with a nod at Mr. Frost. Mr. Frost quietly said No.

A tremendously long ordinance providing for the office of inspector of buildings and for the construction of buildings according to certain requirements, was introduced. It is the development of the ordinance of that title introduced early last year and summarized in The Daily Press exclusively at the time. It was waded through by the Clerk on first reading, and tabled.

While Mr. MacMurray toiled through its forty-odd long sections the President imposed the chair on Mr. Erickson; and most of the Councilmen, who had printed copies of the bill, drifted into the committee room adjoining. Wide-awake Mr. Frazee counted noses, and startled the drowsy atmosphere by exclaiming that there was no quorum. Loud hammering of Mr. Erickson's gavel, and his cry that the members must attend, brought absentees in on a run, and thereafter the quorum was carefully kept full.

On motion of Mr. Fisk, the Finance Committee was instructed to seek additional room for the city offices, either in the Coward Building, or wherever available. He stated that the present offices were crowded, and that fireproof protection was wanted for the city's valuable sewer maps and similar documents, and one of the stipulations to the Finance Committee was that the extended quarters must have a fireproof vault.

The final action of the session was the finding of a big job for the rebellious Committee on Laws and Ordinances. On motion of Mr. Fisk, who stated that the ordinances were in a mixed-up condition because they had been so often amended and repealed and yet never compiled in their existing entirety, the committee was instructed to recodify them with a view to having them printed in full and accurate form for distribution among the people.

As the Council adjourned to January 14, Messrs. Frazee and Westphal repeated that the ordinance work mapped out was not for them as they had resigned from the committee.

"Do n't you intend to fulfil your oath of office?"—asked Mr. Erickson. They did n't say.

PARTICULAR MENTION.

R. F. M. Chase has returned from Europe.

Mrs. James Morning is improving from her recent illness.

Mrs. Wm. Snell and child returned yesterday to Dunellen.

Alfred Noel, son of Netherwood's ex-postmaster, is severely ill.

Miss Fanny Rafferty of Park avenue is visiting in New Brunswick.

A severe cold confines Miss Lizzie Dunn of West Fourth street to her home.

The illness of Ernest Conover of Elmwood place has developed into whooping cough.

Letter-Carrier James Mullen was obliged to lay off yesterday on account of a sprained shoulder, caused by a fall a few days ago.

Genial and popular Harry Werner received a short visit from his father, J. Werner, this week. The senior Werner is one of Bridgeport's leading clothiers.

P. J. McAndrews, the popular Plainfield yardmaster of the Jersey Ccentral, has been confined to his home for some days, suffering from a severe cold and an attack of rheumatism.

The reception held last evening at Rev. Dr. Rodman's residence on La Grande avenue called together but few members of the parish, most everyone believing the affair had been postponed owing to the inclement weather. Those who did assemble, however, spent a most enjoyable evening in quiet social intercourse, and were more than paid for their effort in braving the elements. It is to be hoped that the weather will be more propitious on next Monday evening, when the second reception of the series will be held.

Installation and Entertainment.

District Deputy Grand Master Stannet and staff from Westfield installed the newly elected officers of Plainfield Lodge No. 44, I. O. O. F., last evening. In addition to the elected officers previously mentioned by The Press the following were appointed:

R. S. N. G.—James Clarkson.
L. S. N. G.—N. Pennington.
R. S. V. G.—F. Long.
L. S. V. G.—Mr. Somers.

L. S. S.—J. Horton.
I. G.—Mr. Nelsweich.
O. G.—J. Sutton.

Trustees, (elected by acclamation)—C. Tallman, L. C. Kline, J. Morton.

Following the installation a very pleasant entertainment was rendered, during which the visiting brethren favored with pleasant remarks and laughable recitations, and the good reputation of 44 as entertainers was sustained by Plainfield's ever-popular Dutch comedian, John H Carney, in several happy selections, and by E. M. Odam in comic songs. Following the entertainment supper was served.

Braham Home Again.

Benjamin Braham, alias Gilbride, who had been in custody for alleged swindling, arrived in town from Philadelphia last evening, accompanied by his wife. Owing to Braham's late arrival on Saturday afternoon in Philadelphia he was obliged to wait until court opened Monday morning before bail could be furnished. Mr. Braham's uncle, for many years court interpreter, immediately went his bail in $800.

—The officers of Queen City Lodge, No. 226, will be installed next Monday evening.

Carlton Cornwell, foreman of the Gazette, Middletown, N. J., believes that Chamberlain's Cough Remedy should be in every home. He used it for a cold and it effected a speedy cure. He says: "It is indeed a grand remedy, I can recommend to all. I have also seen it used for whooping cough with the best results." 25 and 50c bottles for sale at Reynolds's Pharmacy, Park and North avenues. T. S. Armstrong, manager.

MAYOR GILBERT POINTS THE WAY.

Gives the New Council Good Suggestions on the Topics of Sewerage, Rapid Transit, the Administration of Relief, Police Protection, the Water Supply Investigation, and Other Matters of Leading Public Interest—An Able and Comprehensive Review of What Has Been Done and What Is Best to Do.

PLAINFIELD, Jan. 7, 1895.

To the Honorable Common Council of the City of Plainfield.

GENTLEMEN:—It is my privilege to submit a fifth annual message to your Honorable Body, and in so doing I desire to congratulate you on the favorable showing presented in your financial exhibit for 1894.

You commenced the year with an available cash balance of $4 135.67, and outstanding notes of $20,400. The notes have all been paid from the collection of taxes delinquent prior to 1894.

You closed the year with unpaid notes amounting to $16,500, and an available cash balance of $9,584.28. I do not include the notes given for sewer construction in the above statement, as these are to be provided for by special assessment. The uncollected taxes from 1882 to 1894 inclusive amounts to $69,563.56, showing an increase during the year of $2,168.14.

The following comparative statement of expenditures in the principal departments for the years 1893 and '94, will enable you to see to what extent the cost of maintaining these departments has been reduced or increased:

	1893	1894.
Streets	$17,403 02	$11,990 71
Police	8,848 43	9,367 44
Street Lights	9,589 04	9,834 82
Fire Department	11,799 09	12,074 33
Fire Dep't Building	9,843 27
City Poor	4,407 98	4,172 53
Hydrants	2,332 50	3,256 50
Printing & Stationery	2,331 61	1,340 12
Election Expenses	1,094 95	1,062 01
Public Library	3,662 13	2,988 97

I do not include the miscellaneous expenditures, as they do not vary much during the two years. My object is simply to give the general public an opportunity of seeing in a condensed form, how the public money is being spent.

The Fire Department expenditure is increased for 1894 by the payment of claims of prior years amounting to $1,099 58.

I think it can be truly said that the fiscal affairs of our city are in good shape, and that they are looked after with the care and fidelity that characterize the management of successful business corporations. The people should, and doubtless do, appreciate this, and will not criticise adversely large expenditures where they are shown to be necessary for the public good.

We are all interested in making Plainfield a model city, the accomplishment of which, while it will not justify extravagance of expenditure, does call for a spirit of liberality on the part of taxpayers. We are living in an age of progress, and to keep our place in the foremost rank we must equip ourselves with everything that is necessary to promote the health, comfort and prosperity of our people.

Among the most urgent of our needs at the present time is an increase of the police force. The addition of, at least, five patrolmen to the present force is required to put the department in a state of efficiency. With the few men now on duty the beats are so large that it is impossible for the most vigilant officer to prevent disorderly occurrences in his district. The growth of the city in wealth and population is too rapid to justify too close economy in this department.

A new station house is also needed. The present one is badly located, small and unsanitary, and in every way unsuited to the wants of our city. I earnestly urge the early consideration of this subject.

The illegal selling of liquor is a matter that has engaged the attention of the police during the past year. Several offenders have been convicted, but owing to the fact that the laws to prevent the unlawful sale of liquor seem to favor the liquor sellers, it is almost impossible to enforce a penalty. Convictions secured in our City Court are appealable to the County Courts, the appeal carrying with it the right of a new trial, which practically destroys the jurisdiction of our City Court in cases of this kind. I have requested our Corporation Counsel to prepare a bill for submission to the Legislature to correct this anomaly.

I would suggest the adoption of a new ordinance to compel the removal of snow and ice from sidewalks and gutters, with provision authorizing the Street Commissioner, in case of failure of land owners to comply with the ordinance, to cause the snow and ice to be removed, and to certify the costs and expense of such removal to the Assessor of Taxes, as provided in the Public Laws of 1882, page 93. The present ordinance is cumbersome, and difficult to enforce, and contains no provision authorizing the removal of snow and ice from lands of non-resident owners.

I desire also to call your attention to the necessity of a stricter regulation concerning the discharge of firearms within the limits of the city. The recent deplorable accidents in our midst, emphasize the importance of this. The Corporation Counsel has already given some thought to this matter, and doubtless will be able to draw an ordinance that will meet the requirement.

It is my judgment that an amendment to the ordinance to license peddlers which shall provide for the granting of licenses for a shorter term than one year at a proportionately reduced fee, can very properly be made. Under the ordinance as it now stands, all licenses expire on March 1st. This seems an unnecessary hardship to those who desire to take out licenses during the latter part of the year. It would also facilitate matters if authority should be granted to the Mayor or City Clerk to grant licenses during the interim of the meetings of the Council.

The Madison avenue widening is a matter that will come before you at an early day, and doubtless will receive your early attention. This is an important public improvement, the completion of which will greatly promote the appearance and value of property in its immediate neighborhood. The amount assessed against the city seems large, but if no error has been made in estimating the cost, and if the parties assessed for benefits will pay the assessment without delay or opposition, the city can well afford to pay the amount assessed against it, in order to secure this improvement. In my judgment the propriety of assessing a portion of the expense upon the city at large, cannot be questioned, and the amount assessed by the Commissioners does not seem too large.

The beginning of sewerage construction marks an important event in the history of the city. Doubts have been felt and expressed by many as to the ability of the city to construct the proposed sewers for the sum named in the report of the Sewerage Committee, but the figure at which the first contract has been made, removes all doubt as to the correctness of the Committee's estimate. It has been thought wise to discontinue work for the Winter. It will be resumed in the early Spring, and unless some unforeseen obstacle interposes, the probability is that sewers will be in operation in the course of a year thereafter.

I am still of the opinion expressed in a former communication to the Common Council, that Plainfield and North Plainfield should, if possible, co-operate in the selection of disposal beds. The movement in favor of sewers is making progress in the borough, and the probability is that the work will be begun at an early day. When a survey is made and it becomes definitely known to what point the sewage of the borough can be carried by gravity, the question of co-operation can be considered and determined.

There is undoubtedly a feeling of apprehension on the part of many with reference to the location of the disposal beds. This feeling is but natural, and will only be removed when the system is completed and in operation to prove its own inoffensiveness. I have endeavored to correctly inform myself on this point by a close investigation of filtration systems already in operation, and I feel well satisfied that all fears touching this feature of our proposed system are groundless. I am informed that the feeling in the borough is in favor of co-operation if we will carry our line to the Raritan River. Gladly would I favor this proposition if I could feel certain that we would be left in undisturbed possession of our outlet after we reach it. The Raritan River, at any point that we could economically reach by gravity, is not a navigable stream, neither has it a sufficient flow of water at certain seasons to carry off the solid matter that would be emptied into it by a population as large as ours. It may be considered unwise to anticipate legal obstacles, but it seems to me that the uncertainty is too great to justify the expenditure required to reach the Raritan, when by intermittent filtration we can secure a more efficient and less expensive method of disposal. I feel quite certain that if the borough council would appoint a committee to visit South Framingham and inspect the system in operation there, they would quickly decide in favor of filtration, and co-operation.

After the sewers are laid, I think it will be well for the Council to consider the wisdom of laying in the business portion of the city, a more durable pavement than crushed stone affords. Macadamized streets are only serviceable and economical in sections where they are little used. Where there is much travel, experience shows them to be a most expensive form of pavement. I am quite sure that a move in this direction would, in the long run, be in the interest of economy.

The report of the Committee on Water and Sewerage, under date of December 28, 1894, regarding the effect upon our water supply, of excessive pumping to supply outside towns and cities with water, is very suggestive, and is deserving of serious consideration. It seems to establish very clearly the following facts:

1st. That there is a possibility of the impairment of both the quantity and quality of our water, through the undertaking on the part of the Water Company to provide too large an outside area with water drawn from our source of supply.

2d. That under its charter, the Plainfield Water Supply Company has no legal right to furnish any place outside of Plainfield and adjoining towns with water drawn from our source of supply.

3d. That the term adjoining towns, includes only those towns whose territory is in actual contact with the territory of Plainfield.

The danger referred to may be, and probably is remote, but the possibility of danger should suffice to make us very watchful. This question is of too much importance to the people of Plainfield to be disposed of without further attention. I suggest that it be referred to an appropriate committee with instructions to pursue the investigation still further with the view of determining more fully whether the pumping is sufficiently excessive to have any general effect upon private wells throughout the city.

The problem how to provide for the city poor still presses for a solution. I have written so much on this subject that I hesitate to again refer to it, but the longer our present system prevails, the more I can see the need of a change. Our methods are wrong, and neither produce the best results for the city nor for the dependent poor. I think that a poor farm put under the control and supervision of the Organized Aid Association or some other society, equally interested in the welfare of the poor, would be a solution of the question. This would effectually do away with the present system of outdoor relief, would reduce the number of beneficiaries to those whom thorough investigation would show to be worthy, would develop a system, with intelligent supervision instead of public indifference as the administrative head, and would, I believe, result in a saving to the city. The Council could make a yearly appropriation for the support of the city poor, to be expended by the organization selected for that purpose, and thus relieve itself of a responsibility which it is not qualified to discharge.

I present this as a suggestion of a plan, the details of which can be more fully worked out, if it commends itself to your honorable body as worthy of further consideration.

Our street railway has been in operation nearly three years, and I think it is safe to assume that our people have come to regard it as a convenience that should be generally extended throughout the city. The chief obstacle is the difficulty of selecting a route that will be acceptable to the property owners along that route. All would like the railroad to ride upon, but few are willing that it should go by their doors. The last Council passed a resolution authorizing me to select a committee of five to act with the Committee on Streets in locating a route. I find it difficult to obtain a committee in the absence of any definite proposition to work upon. I have been informed that several parties are willing to submit a proposition to construct a line to Netherwood, another one to the Cemetery, and still another one through Fourth or Sixth street to the westerly limit of the city. If this is correct, it seems proper that a definite proposition should be submitted as a necessary prelude to action by your Honorable Body. When a proposition has been favorably acted upon by the Council, the question of route can only be determined by an effort to obtain consent of property owners. This must be the work of the company seeking to locate its tracks. The location of a route by any committee in advance of this, would appear to be of minor importance. However, I shall be glad to appoint a committee, or to co-operate with you in any other way to promote railway extension, or any other object that has in view the public welfare.

Respectfully submitted,

A. GILBERT.

THE CAUCUS NOT A UNIT

Show of Opposition to Carlisle's Banking Bill.

Eighty-one Votes for the Proposition While Fifty-nine Were Against It—Seventy-five Absentees Noted—Mr. Springer's Earnest Appeal to Members To Stand by the Measure.

Washington, Jan. 8.—Three hours were spent in caucus by the democrats of the house. The purpose of the caucus was to secure an exchange of views regarding the Carlisle banking bill which was taken up for debate a week before the holiday recess, and which is still before the house. A number of speeches were made in favor of the bill while the opposition was also well represented. The principal vote of the day hinged on a resolution introduced by Speaker Crisp, "that it is the sense of the house that the Carlisle currency bill should be passed by the house of representatives substantially as presented." This resolution was finally adopted by a vote of 81 to 59. The vote showed that seventy-five democratic members of the house were not present at the caucus. This vote and the speeches for and against the bill seemed to be differently interpreted. Mr. Springer, for example, believes that many of those who opposed the Crisp resolution, will support the Carlisle bill in the end, the more especially as some of them are constrained to believe that it will be amended so as to be more in conformity with their sentiments. He says that to argue that the fifty-nine gentlemen who opposed the resolution will also oppose the bill would be to say that the caucus has no persuasive power, a fact which he is inclined strongly to dispute. He believes that a majority of the seventy-five absentees will also support the bill and that it will be carried by a fair majority.

Other gentlemen regard the spirit displayed at the caucus as indicating the death of the measure. They say that the speeches in opposition to the bill show that the extreme silver men as well as the opponents of free silver with but few exceptions, have joined hands in opposition to the measure and that their opposition will be supplemented by the solid vote of the republicans and populists, and that as a result the measure cannot pass the house.

One of the curious incidents of the caucus was the meagre support accorded to the amendment offered by Mr. Sperry, of Connecticut, the purpose of which was to commit the caucus to an indorsement of the bill introduced by him last week to fund the greenbacks and the treasury notes into bonds. An analysis of the vote given for this amendment shows that four of its thirteen supporters are western men, two from Ohio and two from Wisconsin and that the remaining nine are from the east.

Equally surprising was the large vote given to the Terry amendment which authorized the coinage by the secretary of the treasury of a silver dollar of 412½ grains for each inhabitant of the forty-four states and territories. This amendment received the support of fifty-four members and was defeated by a bare majority of ten.

Mr. Springer, in supporting the Carlisle resolution, said:

"The Carlisle bill took the government out of the banking business. If passed, the government would not be responsible either for the current or final redemption of national bank notes. There could be no monopoly under this bill, for banking would be free and all banks that complied with its provisions could take out currency.

"The banks themselves could neither expand nor contract the currency. If there were $100,000,000 of bank notes in the vaults of the banks not one dollar could get into circulation unless some man having business to transact should borrow it and thus put it into circulation.

"The Carlisle bill avoided the extremes which were represented in the country and in the house. It was opposed by Wall street and the national banks on the one hand and on the other by the populists and those who believed that the coinage of free silver at 16 to 1 was the only savior for our financial ills.

"It was a conservative measure, such as the democratic party could adopt and would receive the support of democrats in every part of the country. It has been recommended to congress by a democratic administration. Our democratic president had indorsed it in his message to congress.

"It had been prepared after careful study and investigation by the democratic secretary of the treasury, Mr. Carlisle, a gentleman whose abilities are not excelled by any man in the United States; who presided over the house for six years; who adorned a seat in the senate of the United States and whose administration of the treasury department has been as able as that of any of his predecessors.

"Mr. Carlisle is of the opinion that this bill, if passed, will bring the needed relief to the treasury and while it was not all that he and the democratic members of the banking and currency committee desired to accomplish, it was all in their opinion that could possibly be secured at this time.

"I appeal to democrats to stand by this measure and pass it through the house, believing as I do that it is the very best that can be had under the circumstances."

At the close of his remarks, Mr. Springer was loudly applauded by his colleagues.

WAR BETWEEN LEADERS

What the Outcome of the Labor Fight Will Be.

Defeat for the Knights of Labor Means a Loss of 8,000 Members, While Victory for Them Would Cause a Disorganization of the Mine Workers' Union.

Columbus, O., Jan. 8.—The national executive board of the United Mine Workers' union has completed its work and the members have left for their respective homes, leaving President Penna and Secretary McBryde to complete the arrangements for the convention to be held here February 12.

There will be two conventions, one of which will be composed of delegates from local assemblies of the Knights of Labor attached to District No. 135, and the other will be a joint meeting of Knights of Labor and progressive union delegates composing the United Mine Workers' union.

It has heretofore been the custom for the United Mine Workers' convention to be held first, but for obvious reasons the Knights of Labor will meet first this time.

Two calls have been formulated by the executive board, one of which is secret and is being sent to Knights of Labor assemblies and the other contains nothing of interest to the general public. The greatest interest hinges on the probable action of the Knights of Labor convention which will meet Feb. 11.

Upon the action taken at that meeting depends to a great extent the business which will be transacted by the other convention which is called to meet the following day.

The secret circular is understood to embody charges against Hayes and Sovereign of the Knights of Labor and advises the miners local assemblies to send delegates instructed to vote to cut loose from the general assembly of the Knights of Labor.

On the other hand, a secret circular is being sent out by Messrs. Hayes and Sovereign appealing to the miners to withdraw from the United Mine Workers and connect themselves directly with the general assembly of the Knights of Labor.

Thus the issue is drawn and upon these two lines the fight between Knights of Labor and United Mine Workers' officials will be waged when the convention meets.

Should the Mine Workers' officials win, the result will be a loss of 8,000 members to the Knights of Labor, and should Hayes and Sovereign come out victorious the result will be practically a disorganization of the Mine Workers' organization. Grand Master Workman Sovereign and Secretary Hayes, together with the general executive board of the Knights of Labor will be here to make the fight of their lives and the same will be true of the Mine Workers' officials.

In view of the fact that the fight will be bitter and speechmaking will probably be unlimited it is not likely that the Knights of Labor convention will complete its business in one day as contemplated by the call. Unless it should happen that the delegates should be practically of one mind and conclude to cut the wrangle between their two sets of officials short and decide the question at issue themselves, there is danger that the entire week will be consumed by the Knights of Labor convention.

For the reasons stated the conventions will be the most important and sensational ever held by any branch of organized labor.

THE MINERS' STRIKE.

Operatives and Yardmen Laid Off on the Rochester & Pittsburg Road.

Dubois, Pa., Jan. 8.—The yardmen and night operators on the Buffalo, Rochester & Pittsburg railroad have been laid off on account of the miners' strike. This road hauls all the coal to market from this section.

The meeting of miners and citizens generally held here to discuss the strike situation resulted in the appointment of a committee to draft resolutions for publication asking the mining company to reinstate the discharged men and condemning the company for the wholesale discharge of employes in mid-winter.

A few Italians who were working at Reynoldsville have joined the ranks of the strikers.

Baltimore Firms Assign.

Baltimore, Jan. 8.—The firm of Charles F. F. Carr, successor to Wilson & Carr, shoe dealer, named Thomas A. Whelan as trustee, liabilities, $25,000. Aaron Brag, furniture dealer, also assigned to Samuel W. Pattison; who filed a bond for $32,000.

Northwood Shoe Company Assigns.

Suncook, N. H., Jan. 8.—The Northwood Union Shoe company, fourteen miles from here, has made an assignment to Mr. Woodbury, of Boston, a director. The Northwood Building association has placed an attachment on the machinery, stock, &c.

New York, Jan. 8.—The fire loss of the United States and Canada for the month of December, as estimated from the Journal of Commerce and Commercial Bulletin, amounts to $10,321,000, and the total for the year is $128,246,900.

LIGHT WORK IN CONGRESS.

Both Houses Adjourn Out of Respect to Representative Post.

Washington, Jan. 8.—In the absence both of Vice President Stevenson and the president pro tem. of the senate (Mr. Harris, dem., Tenn.), it became necessary for the senate to elect a new president pro tem., which it did in the person of Mr. Ransom (dem., N. C.)

Mr. Ransom stated, in acknowledging the honor done him, that he would only hold the office until the return of Mr. Harris, which will be in a few days. It will be necessary then, however, to proceed to a re-election. A speedy abandonment of the chair by Mr Ransom in favor of Mr. Manderson (rep., Neb.) gave Mr. Frye (rep., Me.) the chance of inquiring satirically, "why the democrats had not retained their organization." Mr. Lodge's Hawaiian resolution which went to the calendar last Friday, was taken from it and brought before the senate on a motion to that effect, which was carried by a vote of 33 to 12—13 democrats and 3 poplists voting with the majority. Mr. Peffer (pop., Kan.), who had yielded the floor for that motion on condition that there would be no debate occupied the remainder of the morning hour with a speech in favor of his "service pension" bill, after which the Lodge resolution went over till to-day.

Mr. Mitchell (rep., Ore.) then made a speech in favor of the Nicaraguan canal bill. At its close resolutions were adopted in relation to the death of Representative Post of Illinois, and the senate, as a further mark of respect adjourned.

The proceedings in the house were of brief duration. After referring to the judiciary committee a petition of S. J. Ritchie, of Ohio, preferring additional charges against Judge Ricks, of the United States circuit court, which was presented by Mr. Johnson (dem., O.), and agreeing to a resolution directing an investigation of the charges, Mr. Henderson (rep., Ill.) announced to the house the death of his colleague, Mr. Post. The usual resolutions were adopted and the house adjourned until to-day.

MASSACHUSETTS BANKS.

The Annual Report of the State Commissioners.

Boston, Jan. 8.—The annual report of the state savings banks commissioners shows 185 savings banks in the state, with assets of $442,391,264; and 25 trust companies with assets of 110,879,135, which, with the co-operative banks, make 331 institutions under the supervision of the board, with assets of $574,194,000.

Only two new trust companies and two co-operative banks were organized in 1894.

The assets of the savings banks have increased $17,800,000 and those of the trust companies nearly $18,000,000. Of the $15,665,211 paid out in dividends by the savings banks, two paid at 5 per cent., four at 4¾, fifteen at 4½, five at 4¼, 155 at 4, three at 3½ and one at 2 per cent., making the average dividend rate for the year 4.06 per cent., against 4.09 per cent. last year and 4.11 in 1892.

MAY RESULT IN SUCCESS.

Efforts of the State Board To Adjust the Cannelville Mine Trouble.

Columbus, O., Jan. 8.—The indications are that the efforts of the state board of arbitration to adjust the difficulties between Morgan & Tandy and their miners will result in success.

The miners at Cannelville, after agreeing to a settlement by a local board, withdrew their assent and the investigation was then made on application of the operators. The arbitrators decided that sixty cents should be paid for mining coal in veins four feet thick, with the ruling rate of seventy cents in the smaller veins.

This decision was mailed to each party to the controversy and Secretary Bishop has received a letter from J. F. Holdsworth, one of the miners, who stated that the decision and recommendations had been received and unanimously accepted by the men. It is probable that work will be resumed.

Naval Changes.

Washington, Jan. 8.—Admiral Ramsey's son, Assistant Paymaster Mortimer M. Ramsay, has been detached from the Minnesota and ordered to the training ship Essex, displacing passed Assistant Paymaster G. H. Hicks, who goes to the Mohican. Paymaster J. R. Staunton of that vessel being transferred to the Monterey in place of Paymaster W. J. Thompson, ordered as fleet paymaster on the Philadelphia.

Fatal Railroad Collision.

Massillon, O., Jan. 8.—By a collision of trains on the Wheeling & Lake Erie railroad, east of Smithville, Fireman W. J. Ryan was pinned in his cab and was slowly roasted to death. Edwin Longsdorf, of Smithville, had his neck broken. Conductor Joseph Ramms, of Norwalk, George Parrish of Orrville and John Berkhart of Massillon were seriously hurt.

LIFE WAS A BURDEN.

A Pain-Racked Sufferer Tells an Interesting Story—How He Was Tortured for Years and Finally Cured by Munyon's Remedy.

Charles Wark, of 14 N. Twenty-fourth St., Philadelphia, has been a constant sufferer from rheumatism for years. He was cured by the use of Munyon's Rheumatism Cure. This is his story:

"I was afflicted with rheumatism in the righ shoulder and suffered the most excruciating agony. Sharp shooting pains darted through it so intense I could not sleep night. Even the weight of the bedclothes was more than I could bear; neither could I lie on the right side or my back. Life became a perfect burden to me. I could not raise my hand to my head, and when I attempted to put on my coat or any article of dress, the torture was enough to drive me wild. Many remedies were suggested and tried, but none did me the slightest good, and I began to despair of ever being able to obtain relief. Some time ago, however, I procured a bottle of Munyon's Rheumatism Cure. It afforded me relief after the first few doses, and by the time the little 25 cent bottle was gone I was entirely free from pain. I have had no return of my old enemy, and I feel satisfied I am permanently cured. It seems so wonderful I can hardly realize it, and can only show my appreciation of the merits of the Cure by recommending it to other sufferers."

Munyon's Rheumatism Cure is guaranteed to cure rheumatism in any part of the body. Acute or muscular rheumatism cured in from one to five days. It never fails to cure sharp, shooting pains in the arms, legs, sides back or breast, or soreness in any part of the body in from one to three hours. It is guaranteed to promptly cure lameness, stiff and swollen joints, stiff back, and all pains in the hips and loins. Chronic rheumatism, sciatica, lumbago or pain in the back are speedily cured.

Munyon's Homoepathic Home Remedy Company, of Philadelphia, put up specifics for nearly every disease, which are sold by all druggist, mostly for 25 cents a bottle.

COTTOLENE IS MADE TO EAT

Made from clarified oil, expressed from Cotton Seed—as pure and golden as the Southern Sunshine which produces it.

For convenience in handling, there is added to this oil enough beef suet to make it a semi-solid.

The combination of these two pure natural products makes Cottolene, a shortening and cooking fat, with which in healthfulness, cleanliness, flavor and economy, nothing in the world can compare.

IMITATIONS are MADE TO SELL

To sell on the merits of the genuine. To sell by substitution; or by deception. To sell to the injury of the genuine, to the dissatisfaction of the consumer, to the detriment of the dealer, to the loss of all concerned—except the scheming counterfeiter himself.

If you wish the best food and the best health, you should insist that your cooking be done with genuine Cottolene. Refuse all counterfeits.

A CLUE.

Will Open Your Eyes in Amazement.

DREADFUL EVENTS LIKE THIS CONSTANTLY OCCUR.

No Wonder People are Alarmed About This Matter.

People are always seeking clues, and the one which leads straight to the object sought is the strongest and surest. The world is filled with complaints and weaknesses, which, when neglected, lead to the most dangerous diseases. These weaknesses are constantly found among those who think themselves fairly well. Such people are careless, and this is just the reason so many persons break down and become mental and physical wrecks, with shattered nerves and broken health. Your curiosity will be aroused by reading the following letter from Mr. Joseph B. Pierce, of Northfield, Mass. It is the clue to health.

"I have been subject to the fever and ague, which had become chronic. I had the dumb ague without the shaking. I suffered great pain during the spells. I tried many things for a cure, but without good results.

"I tried Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy on the recommendation of a friend, and am happy to say that I derived the best results from its use of anything I ever used.

MR. JOSEPH B. PIERCE.

"My wife has found great relief from sick headache from Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy My wife's aunt has derived so much good from its use that she thinks she cannot do without it."

Dr Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy is the surest road to health, because it has back of it Dr. Greene himself who stands ready at all times to answer for its action and its genuine worth. It cures weakness, nervousness, headache, malaria, dyspepsia, constipation, torpid liver sleeplessness and nervous debility. It makes people strong and well.

Why waste time in trying uncertain and untried remedies, when here is a physician's prescription, a discovery made by the greatest living specialist in curing nervous and chronic diseases, Dr. Greene, of 35 West 14th st., New York City. If you take this medicine you can consider yourself under Dr. Greene's direct professional care, and you can consult him, or write to him about your case, freely and without charge. This is a guarantee that this remedy will cure, possessed by no other medicine in the world.

A BRAKEMAN'S STORY

It was so quiet outside that when the long freight train would come to a standstill with an abrupt, awkward jerk, we could almost hear the big, drifting flakes as they fell. Not a breath of air was stirring, and the big, round moon filtered down through the snow storm with a white softened light that revealed nearby objects in a strange, ghostly sort of way. The soft coal fire that spluttered fitfully in the old-fashioned cast iron upright stove lacked cheer enough to break the spell of the outside air.

Without knowing precisely why, we sat mostly in silence or muttered an occasional monosyllabic observation as to how soon we might reach Jersey City. We were four hours behind time, and somewhere back of us we knew was the West Shore Express likewise behind time, and endeavoring to make up something of its lost run.

Sitting in the small red caboose in the rear of the big freight train, rumbling along through a blind fog of snow with a flying express at our heels, gave an uncanny sensation, that I, for one, did not relish in the least. The drummer who had boarded the train at Newburg sat morosely on a pile of grips, which afforded him a softer seat than the hard, wooden benches strung along the sides of the car. A couple of shippers anxiously discussed the prospects for getting their stock to market without having them half frozen to death.

At the entrance of Joe, the brakeman, however, the glum party seemed to thaw at once. He swung down off the roof of the last box car and in through the door in a cheery, wholesome sort of fashion that warmed us at once.

"Joe," said one of the shippers, "be we going to reach Jersey City before night?"

"Isn't this good enough for you to live in? How'd you like to be out braking to-night?"

"'Taint no snap, that's a fact," the shipper assented.

"No, you bet it ain't," said Joe, decisively. "But this ain't a patching to what it is sometimes."

Something in the manner in which Joe carefully filled his cob pipe, took a bit of stick from the floor, poked it into the fire and lit his pipe slowly and thoughtfully indicated that a story was coming.

"Strange," said Joe at last, with a ruminant look into the fire and a long steady pull at his pipe, "somehow to-night reminds me of the day in January two years ago. That was when we brought Johnny Haines home. Guess you must 'a known Johnny," he added, turning to the shipper.

"Nope. Heard of him. Go on, Joe. What was the story?"

"Not much of a one," Joe replied deprecatingly. "Just a brakeman's yarn, only it's a little out of the common run. The first day I ever saw Johnny Haines I thought him the handsomest lad I ever set my eyes on. He came up on No. 6 on her first trip. We used to meet often up and down the road and got to know each other pretty well. He was one of these lads with a fresh, pink and white complexion and a jolly laugh that made you warm up to him at once. He was straight and strong, and when he used to stand jauntily on top of the car, the train going forty miles an hour and he not thinking it was going at all, there wasn't a girl along the road that hadn't a smile for him as he went by. The lad was anxious to stick and worked hard, and, as he kept his mouth pretty well closed, it was a long time before we found out anything about who he was. He had little ways about him that made us think once in awhile that he hadn't been brought up to work, and his hands at first were as soft and white as a girl's. One of the fellows told us a story of how Johnny belonged to a good family, but got kicked our for some reason or other; but we always thought he made it up, and, in fact we never did find out his story until that night. I mean the night we took him home."

Joe stopped, pulled vigorously at his pipe for a few minutes, blinked rather suspiciously several times, and finally the rather husky voice went on:

"It seems that the lad's name wasn't Haines at all. He took that to conceal his own. His first name really was Johnny, though, and, as that was what everybody called him, the last didn't seem to make so much difference. When he first came on the road he was a little past twenty, and his open, boyish ways made some of the fellows guy him and play tricks on him at first. But it didn't take them long to find out that he had plenty of mettle. A gang of us were laying around the Albany round house one day, waiting for a train to be made up, when Bill Lawson began to nag him and see if he couldn't get a fight out of him. It seems they had some trouble down the road, and when Bill had offered to fight Johnny had refused. He tried to keep out of Bill's way, but when Bill said he was afraid, Johnny turned and walked squarely up to him and said quietly: 'You take that back.' I never knew just how it was done, but Bill made some sort of a feint, and the next moment the big hulking lubber was lying on the ground. Bill didn't seem to know what hit him. But he went at Johnny with such a savage look that a lad without genuine pluck would have turned feather. But when Bill lay sprawling on the ground a second time we found out that Johnny was a scientific boxer. There was an ugly gleam in Bill's eye when he got up, and as he got close up to Johnny, all of a sudden he flashed a big jackknife he always carried. How he got it out of his pocket I never could tell. He made a lunge, but Johnny dodged cleverly and the knife just grazed his face. He was on Bill quicker than it takes to tell it, choking the life out of him. We started to separate them, but when we found that Johnny had Bill so that he could do no damage with the knife, we let them fight it out. Bill finally held up his hand for mercy, and Johnny then let up. After we got them cooled off, Johnny made him shake hands, and, though he didn't show it then, I think afterward Bill came to think as much of him as the rest of us.

Up the road not very far from Albany there is a farm that runs down to the river, and right at the corner of it was a water tank. It happened that on this farm there was a dark eyed little girl who was the idol of all the boys along the road. She wouldn't flirt with us, but she used often to come down to the water tank and get little packages which the engineer, who was a friend of the family used to bring down from Albany. She was plump and peachy, with dark eyebrows and long lashes, and under them the prettiest pair of eyes I ever saw. There wasn't one of us who wouldn't have married her quick if she'd had us. But she was sort o' reserved and shy and none of us had nerve enough to make love to her. All except Johnny. All the girls smiled on Johnny and he smiled on them. He didn't have to see the lass twice before he was head over heels in love with her and it wasn't very long before he made her know all about it. To woo was to win with Johnny, and regular as his train passed the farm Jenny—that was the dame's name—was always there to meet him. We used to chaff Johnny a good deal over the matter, but we couldn't get much out of him.

Somehow, through the engineer or somebody, though, we found out that Johnny was going to marry the girl if he could get his father to consent. He couldn't very well marry on the salary he was getting as a raw brakeman.

"Things ran along through the summer and into the fall, and we noticed that Johnny had got very quiet and reserved like, and was evidently brooding over something. At last we found out that Johnny had been promised a raise, and that along about the holidays he was to be made a passenger brakeman, and then he was going to get married. There wasn't one of us that wasn't glad of it, or who envied him his good luck. The fall stretched way into the winter, I remember, and my, wasn't it beautiful weather! You'd stand up on top of a car, and as the train wound along the river shore mile after mile, just drinking in the air and view. Braking is a hard life, with lots of danger and pretty slim pay. But those days we'd forget all about the hardships and everything else. Johnny was on the same train with me and happy as a lark, thinking how he would marry and go up to Albany to live. I used to notice, though, that every once in a while his brow would cloud up, as if he was thinking of something that hurt him.

"Such weather couldn't last, though, and when the end came, it came with a squall. The thermometer dropped forty degress, and a cold, driving rain that had set in the afternoon turned toward night into a drifting, blinding snow. We had a big train that night, and with the snow and the sleet and the cold it gave us no end of trouble. She parted three or four times, going not more than twenty miles, and it was cold, dangerous work slipping along the top setting brakes or getting down to make couplings. The wind howled and whistled and the snow cut your face, like going through a hedge. It was dark and the lanterns didn't show plain through the snow, and everything seemed to go wrong. Several times we thought we were stalled in the drifts, but we'd uncouple and send the engine and two or three cars through the drift, and then back up and take the rest of the train through. We wanted to get through to Albany, for the next day was a lay off.

"Johnny and I fought like beavers against the cold, and, I tell you, it was ticklish work. I felt more anxious about Johnny than I did about myself, for I was old at the business and he was new, and I knew how easy it was for a sudden jerk to send a man flying down between the wheels. But Johnny wouldn't listen. He said he wasn't afraid, and just then the whistle sounded 'down brakes.' We were sitting in the caboose, shivering around a dirty little fire. I had frozen three of my fingers, and I thought my ears were frosted, too. You see the storm came so sudden we didn't have time to get on any mufflers, and the mittens were pretty thin. Well, we climbed out, and Johnny ran on ahead, saying that he was all right and he'd take the front. The cars on top were as slippery as glass, and we had almost to creep along from one car to another to keep from falling off, for she was running at a good pace, and the snow on the tracks made the cars lurch and swing. I looked up, and through the snow and the dark I recognieed the landmark, and knew we were nearing the water tank, where Johnny's girl lived. Just at that moment the train gave a frightful jerk, and I saw the engine go rearing in the air, and about a hundred feet ahead I saw a lantern swing wildly in the air and go down. I went flat on the car and hung there for dear life. We stopped in ten or twenty yards and I swung off the car like mad. 'Great God, I thought, if that was Johnny!'

"Something made me feel that he had gone under the wheels, and when I crawled ahead a few cars there I found him, lying all white and still. He was too much stunned to say a word. We picked him up and started to carry him to the house—where Jenny lived. We saw that the wheels had gone over both legs—over one near the thigh and the other below the knee. My, but he was a game lad, for all the torture of bringing him up the hill couldn't wring a word from him. We knocked at the door and said that one of the boys had got hurt, and that the engine had jumped the track. A white little face came to the door and looked at us a moment, and then as soon as she saw me and my face Jenny shrieked out:

"'It's Johnny!'

"But she didn't faint or cry, or say another word. We just carried him in and put him on the bed, and she took charge of him. One of the boys rode over to get a doctor, but when he came he saw at once that it was no use. It was only a question of how long Johnny could survive the shock. He lay there very quietly, and finally, when the doctor's examination was finished, he said:

"'Is there any show, old man?'

"I couldn't reply, but he knew as I turned my head away what the answer was. Johnny was quiet for a moment, and then pulling Jenny's hand with his own weakly, he said in a husky voice:

"'Little girl, I want to go home.'

"And that he insisted on all the night. We didn't think that he would be alive by the morning. But he was, and we decided to put him on board the morning express. The wrecking train had thrown the engine out of the road and cleared the track, and when the express came down we flagged her and took Johnny aboard. All Jenny would tell us was that his father lived in New York, but gave the conductor an address for a wire.

"We didn't think that he would last the journey, and about half way down he suddenly clutched Jenny's hand hard, and then lay back still. The little girl threw herself upon him sobbing as if her heart would break, but it didn't do any good. Poor Johnny was gone."

Joe paused a moment and looked into the fire.

"Well," he said, "to cut it short, when we got into Jersey City Johnny's father was there. It didn't take more than a glance at his clothes and his portly bearing to tell me that he was a rich man. He sprang into the car, and would have pushed me out of the road. I knew who he was and I held onto him, and I said:

"'Wait a minute. Johnny was pretty badly hurt.'

"He grabbed me like a vise and said, in a sweet voice:

"'Can he live?'

"I shook my head, and he gasped:

"'Is he—'

"I led him over to where the boy lay, but he didn't want to see him. He looked very hard at the little girl who sat there sobbing, and said slowly:

"'Is this Jenny?'

"And then he took her very quietly in his arms and kissed her.

"I went to the funeral the next day. The old man's hair was turned white, and his face was as lined and rigid as though he was mounting a scaffold. He was twenty years older than the morning I saw him first. It seems that Johnny was brought up, like most boys, to have all the money he wanted. He got wild and in with a fast gang, and, to try to curb him, his father, who was a wealthy banker, got him a place in a store as cashier. Johnny's allowance wasn't enough, and he made it up out of the cash drawer. When it was discovered his father made up the amount, and then sent Johnny adrift. He never spoke to him afterward, and when Johnny, after a year's good service on the road, appealed to him for money enough to get married on, the old man returned his letter. I found it in Johnny's coat pocket the morning we took him home."

The train whistled for a station, and Joe, grabbing his lantern, escaped into the night and the falling snow.—New York Herald.

The Original Dime Novel Man.

The original dime novel man is dead. Who has not heard of Beadle? What man of to-day has not declaimed pieces out of Beadle's Dime Speaker in his schoolboy days? Who has not smuggled Beadle's novels into his room and kept himself out of mischief for many an hour with them? Though Beadle never wrote a line in his life, no author's name was more familiar to a larger class of readers than his a quarter of a century ago. Such is the fortune of publishers. They get the literary fame for what others do.

FOR PLAINFIELD'S PROGRESS.

Pakenham's Heroic Death In Battle.

The battle of New Orleans, Jan. 8, 1815, revealed the wonderful talent of Andrew Jackson and found a hero on the British side in Sir Edward Pakenham. Jackson had improved the time since the repulse of the enemy on Jan. 1 by adding to the defenses a second and a reserved line of parapets, behind which his men were distributed in a way to make their fire tell upon the assaulting columns. To all appearance the American position was impregnable. The colonel of the Forty-fourth, the British regiment chosen to cross the ditch and scale the walls, declared, "My men have been ordered to execution."

When the hour arrived to fire the signal rocket, and the Forty-fourth was not in position, Pakenham led forward the next in line, and seeing the soldiers falter on meeting the American fire he took off his hat and waved it, at the same time spurring his horse into the arena, where the shots were most deadly. A bullet shattered his bridle arm, which fell to his side, while his horse dropped dead beneath him. Mounting another, he rode with the front rank of the Highlanders as they advanced in lieu of the Forty-fourth on what looked to be a row of fiery furnaces along the American trenches. Realizing the desperate work before him, Pakenham called out to an aid near him, "Order up the reserves!" Again waving his hat and shouting to his men, he rode on with the Highlanders until a mass of grapeshot struck him down, killed his horse and shattered his thigh. Before he could be removed from the field a third shot entered his groin. He died before the battle was decided.

GEORGE L. KILMER.

A Cavalry Raid For Bread and Booty.

On the 8th of January, 1863, Springfield, Mo., the scene of Colonel Mulligan's memorable defense in 1861, was attacked by General Marmaduke's raiding columns of Confederates. Marmaduke acknowledged a strength of 2,000 troopers, including Shelby, with his famous horse battery under Captain Collins. The Union garrison, commanded by General E. B. Brown, consisted of the Eighteenth Iowa volunteers, three battalions of militia and a "quinine brigade," made up of convalescents from the hospitals, and also numbered 2,000. Marmaduke was tempted by the rich army stores rumored to exist at Springfield to turn aside from his raid and capture the town.

The attack opened at 10 o'clock, Marmaduke's line advancing gallantly, with a center column composed of dismounted men and three cannon, and cavalry on each flank. The dismounted men were repulsed in front of the principal work on the outskirts of the town, but Shelby's brigade, mustering 1,000 sabers, charged the position, capturing the one gun exposed outside the rampart, and also an unfinished stockade in the vicinity. Numerous sorties were made by the garrison to dislodge the enemy.

During this time Collins' battery kept up a vigorous bombardment, only feebly answered by the garrison on account of a lack of serviceable guns and cannoneers. When the battle was its height, General Brown rode through the streets to encourage his men to hold out and was treacherously shot down by a bullet fired from a window behind him. The combat lasted until dark, the advantage swinging from one side to the other alternately, but Marmaduke finally abandoned the attack, leaving his dead and wounded to the enemy.

GEORGE L. KILMER.

Councilman Frost called on the editor of this paper at the meeting of the Common Council last night, to corroborate his statement concerning the attitude of the newspapers on the matter of printing the water-supply report, knowing that the editor had no privilege of replying at that time. The Press now states that the editors of The Press and The Courier-News made a proposition to Mr. Frost to print in their papers the report in question at a figure which would barely pay for the type-setting at the union rate of wages, which The Press voluntarily pays its compositors despite the fact that there is no union in Plainfield. The Press and The Courier-News refused to make any bid on the pamphlet job proposed, under the circumstances, which circumstances were that the local bidders were expected to compete against New York bidders whose alleged figure as quoted by Mr. Frost was less than the actual cost of composition at the rate of wages paid by The Press, to say nothing of the cost of white paper, pressework and binding. The Press took the position that the papers which print for nothing the year round, at the sacrifice of much all-night oil and reportorial sleep, the proceedings of the august councilmanic body, were entitled to all councilmanic printing there is going; and it objected and continues to object on principle to the limited publication by pamphlet of important public matters which the people are entitled to read in their local daily newspapers, papers which reach every home every day, while the pamphlets accumulate as junk in the Clerk's office.

SCHOOL FIRE ESCAPES.

Their Establishment Discussed and Deferred.

SPRING VACATIONS CRITICIZED.

Proposition to Abolish the Easter Holidays and Close the Schools that Much Earlier in June—Teachers to Be Consulted—The Board Decide to Have Bylaws—Report of Contagious Disease Denied.

The new Board of Education met last evening, Mr. Finch calling the body together at 8:15.

Mr. Lovell was chosen temporary chairman, and immediately afterwards Dr. J. B. Probasco was made president, Mr. Finch secretary, and F. B. Clark clerk.

President Probasco thanked the Board for the honor bestowed. He also said, "We have met the enemy, and crossed the bridge thus far, and this year gives much promise". He advised that members of the Board visit at least one school each month.

Mr. Finch agreed with the president in regard to this, and hoped that the Board would have more success this year in their undertakings.

Superintendent Maxson, in the absence of Clerk Clark, who was detained by illness, read the minutes of the December meeting, which were approved as read.

The monthly bills were read by Secretary Finch, and on motion of Mr. Lounsbury ordered paid.

One bill, which specified the purchase of a "dissecting instrument", was objected to by Dr. Probasco on account of the term used, and the wording was changed to a "case of instruments".

The new system of providing school books for the scholars had thus far cost $2,200, and the list is not entirely completed.

The electric light bill of the Bryant School was again very large, and Mr. Finch saw no reason why it should be almost double that of the others.

Dr. Jenkins explained the bill by saying that the janitor was obliged to use light in the cellar to do his work.

The report of Collector Johnson showed that $25,238 had been received and deposited in the two banks.

Treasurer Titsworth in a statement said that $60,066.95 State money had been received and deposited in the First National Bank.

A set of resolutions was read by Mr. Finch relative to the death of the late L. E. Clark. They were prepared by Mr. Finch, Dr. Probasco and Dr. Jenkins, committee. The Board accepted them and ordered that a copy be sent to the family and that they be spread on the minutes.

The question of fire escapes came up for discussion, Mr. Lounsbury stating that three of the five companies had communicated with the Board and made estimates. Mr. Wilkes of Trenton was present, and a set of complete plans was offered by him.

Mr. Lounsbury thought that every school building should be equipped. It would cost, he added, about $2,200 to place fire escapes on the nklin, Irving and Stillman buildings, and to comply with the State law all should have them.

The Committee on Buildings simply reported progress, and said they would call a special meeting soon to decide the matter.

Superintendent Maxson said that he had written to Dr. M. J. Whitford, clerk of the Dunellen schools, in regard to the tuition of outside scholars, and as yet had heard nothing from him. He intended looking into the matter.

Under the head of new business, Mr. Finch spoke of several complaints that had been made regarding the stones in the Bryant schoolyard, cutting the children's shoes. The matter will be attended to by the Committee on Buildings.

President Probasco announced the following Standing Committees for 1895:

Teachers—Probasco, Lovell, Finch.

Buildings and Repairs — Lounsbury, Probasco, Finch.

Fuel—Jenkins, Finch.

Finance—Finch, Lounsbury.

Books, Stationery and Supplies—Lovell, Jenkins, Finch.

Superintendent Maxson offered the following calendar for the year:

End of Winter term, March 29; beginning of Spring term, April 8; end of Spring term, June 21; beginning of Fall term, Sept. 9; end of Fall term, Dec. 20

Dr. Probasco brought up the old question of Spring vacation. He was in favor of doing away with it, and closing that much earlier in June. He thought it was a waste of time to have it, as the children can't play or ride their wheels at that season. Mr. Finch, Mr. Lovell, and Dr. Jenkins thought there were some good features about it, and were of the opinion that the children should have the vacation.

Mr. Lounsbury thought that the teachers were not overworked, nor the children, and that they have too much vacation, and too much time was already being lost.

He was in favor of cutting off Spring vacation and working right up to the time of closing, without the short session previous to Commencement. He said the girls in stores had to work hard and did not have nearly as much time as teachers. Practically there was no hard work about it.

Superintendent Maxson thought the vacation was a good thing.

It was decided that the Board should think it over and that Superintendent Maxson see the teachers and get their opinion of the matter.

Clerk Clark was authorized to have 800 copies of the report of the Superintendent and financial standing of schools printed, the same as last year.

Mr. Lounsbury offered a resolution that a committee of two be appointed to revise the bylaws and make them consistent with State law. After considerable discussion this was carried.

Mr. Finch thought that the Board had such extraordinary powers that such action was not necessary, and said that in years past the Boards were composed of men of good judgment who had not thought it necessary to have by-laws.

Mr. Lounsbury said he saw no reason why the Board should not have by-laws to guide them in their actions in the future.

Another resolution by Mr. Lounsbury, that the clerk and superintendent arrange and collate a system of rules for the government of schools, was not passed.

Prof. Maxson said that the report that there was a case of scarlet fever in the Irving School was untrue.

President Probasco appointed Mr. Lounsbury and Mr. Lovell as a By-laws Committee.

The Board adjourned at 9:45.

SHE COULDN'T BE BOTHERED.

A Shopkeeper Who Wasn't Concerned About Trade.

Down in Nantucket, as in many country regions, the ways of trade are not as we find them in the turmoil of city affairs. There life seems always like a summer afternoon. No one is solicited to buy wares of any description, and the maxim tacitly prevails that "you can take it or leave it." Yet much may be missed by such luxurious modes of action.

When President Hayes was in that region, his wife went to the little shop of an exceedingly independent old lady who sells the baskets made by men on board the lightships anchored all about that region. President Hayes was away for the time, being entertained elsewhere, and Mrs. Hayes walked about, enjoying herself.

When she entered the shop the old lady was sitting in the background, reading. The visitor stood there for a moment, and then began to examine the baskets on the counter. No one noticed her.

"What is the price of this basket?" she ventured at length.

The old lady looked up from her reading.

"Look on the bottom," she said, abruptly, and continued scanning the paper.

"And this?" said Mrs. Hayes, indicating another.

"Prices all marked on the bottom," was the brief reply.

The president's wife pursued her examination, and at length asked:

"Could you attend to me now? I would like to buy some of these."

The old lady did not move, but replied, with perfect kindliness:

"I can't be bothered now. You'll have to wait till I finish this piece. I'm reading about the president's going down to Cottage City."—Youth's Companion.

WHAT ARE THE "BLUES"?

Woman's Color is an Unfailing Thermometer.

[SPECIAL TO OUR LADY READERS.]

A woman's thermometer is her color. She is red with embarrassment or some deep emotion; she is white with fright; she is supposed to be green with envy; but when she is blue it means that she is sick.

It is not the fault of the woman if she has the blues and that "want-to-be-let-alone" feeling. It is the fault of her condition which makes happiness impossible.

No woman can be happy and lighthearted when painful female complaints crush out her life.

If she is melancholy, excitable, nervous, dizzy, or troubled with sleeplessness or fainting spells, they are symptoms of serious female weakness.

A leaf out of the experience of Mrs. Anna Miller, who lives at Duhring, Pa., shows that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound will cure that terrible weakness and bearing-down pain in the abdomen, the dizziness in the head, the feeling of irritability, and loss of appetite.

"I can highly recommend your Vegetable Compound," she writes, "for all female complaints. It's my greatest friend."

REMOVAL.

Dr. Lighthill begs leave to give notice that he has removed to

(a few doors from his former location) where he can be consulted on all chronic diseases of whatever name and nature.

Dr. Lighthill refers with pardonable pride to the success of his practice in Plainfield and submits below a few of the many testimonials which he has received from grateful patients. A mass of similar ones can be seen at his office.

AN ALMOST MIRACULOUS CURE.

The Statement of Mr. Edward Teel, Jr., of Dunellen, N. J.

TO THE PUBLIC:

From a sense of duty I desire to call public attention to the almost miraculous cure which Dr. Lighthill effected in the case of my wife. For eleven years she had been afflicted with piles of an unusual severe and distressing character. She suffered every day of her life the most intense pain, attended with frequent and profuse hemorrhage. This state of things debilitated her entire system until she became a perfect wreck of her former self.

We made every effort to obtain a cure but they all resulted in bitter disappointment, although a number of physicians of excellent reputations for skill in that direction had treated her case. She grew worse and worse all the time, the pain became perfectly unbearable and I felt she could not bear the strain of her condition much longer. In this extremity, a friend of mine, Mr. W. E. Dilts, a resident of Roselle, N. J., a passenger conductor on the New Jersey Central told me that he had been similarly affected, and had been permanently cured by Dr. Lighthill, after other medical skill had failed. He assured me that the doctor would cure my wife, no matter how severe her case may be, and his prediction proved perfectly correct. In spite of her desperate condition, Dr. Lighthill, I am glad to say, has effected a complete and perfect cure in her case, and has given her new life.

Since the cure has been effected she has gained in health and strength and is so improved in appearance that her friends scarcely recognize her. They all consider her cure as almost miraculous, and Dr. Lighthill's praise is heard on every side. Our gratitude to Dr. Lighthill is unbounded and we only hope that other sufferers may be benefited by this publication.

EDWARD TEEL, JR.

A Flattering Testimonial from Colonel John Dietrich, One of Plainfield's Oldest and Best Known Residents.

16 ARLINGTON PLACE,
Plainfield, N. J., July 17, 1894.

I am profoundly grateful to Dr. Lighthill for his speedy and radical cure of a most painful malady of over ten years standing with which I was afflicted.

I deem it proper to say to all afflicted to place themselves under the care of this skilful physician and be permanently cured.

I will cheerfully impart any information I possess when called upon.

JOHN DIETRICH.

Mr. Thomas Callahan of No. 214 Richmond street Cured of a Very Distressing Trouble by Dr. Lighthill.

PLAINFIELD, N. J., June 1, 1894.

TO THE PUBLIC:

For some time past I have been greatly distressed with noises in the head. They were all over my head and troubled me constantly; they were loudest at night when everything was quiet and at such times would often keep me from sleep and disturb my rest. In fact they got to be so bad and distressing that they affected my whole nervous system as well as my health. I did not obtain the least relief until I placed myself under the care of Dr. Lighthill, of No. 132 Crescent avenue, who effected a complete cure in my case in a short time and made me a very happy man.

THOMAS CALLAHAN,
214 Richmond street.

A Card From Mr. T. R VanZandt,

of Nos. 304 and 306 Park ave.,

Plainfield, N. J

I certify with pleasure that Dr. Lighthill has effectually cured me of a most painful case of piles. For some time past I had been subject to its attacks, but the last attack was so exceedingly painful that it completely upset my whole system. The pain extended to my legs and in many other directions, and made me so nervous that I could neither sleep, sit down, lie down or move about without serious discomfort and distress. Such was my condition when I applied to Dr. Lighthill for relief, and I am glad to say that as soon as he took hold of my case, I began to improve, and in a short time found myself completely cured. Dr. Lighthill has also effected a radical and permanent cure in a most terrible case of piles on my cousin, Mr. J. V. Z Griggs, of Rocky Hill, N. J., whose flattering testimonial is in Dr. Lighthill's possession.

This is a continuation of the Winter series of literary entertainments which are given every two weeks throughout the season.

New Departure at Edsall's.

The phenomenal success of Edsall's Commercial Palace has induced Mr. Edsall to extend even further his department specialties. He will remove his carpet department to the skylighted apartment under the sidewalk, and will replace it upstairs with a department of women's and children's made-up clothing.

In the front of the main store he will exhibit a full line of toilet articles, perfumes, etc.

In the basement he will establish a department of dry and fancy groceries, and will then have as complete a department store as the metropolis.

The reason Mr. Edsall puts in the grocery department is because of the demand of his patrons for these goods, many having been in the habit of buying them at the dry goods stores in New York.

Mr. Edsall says he is doing all in his power to keep the people of Plainfield from going to New York to do their trading.

—Early this morning the Borough officers found a valuable alderney, belonging to F. C. Jennings of Rockview avenue, wandering through the streets, and took the animal in out of the wet. She was claimed by her owner at 10 a. m.

There is good reason for the popularity of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. Davis & Buzard, of West Monterey, Clarion Co., Pa., say: "It has cured people that our physicians could do nothing for; we persuaded them to try a bottle of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy and now they recommend it with the rest of us." 25 and 50c bottles for sale at Reynolds's Pharmacy, Park and North avenues. T. Armstrong, manager.

Marvelous Results.

From a letter written by Rev. J. Gunderman, of Dismondale, Mich., we are permitted to make this extract: 'I have no hesitation in recommending Dr. King's New Discovery, as the results were almost marvelous in the case of my wife. While I was pastor of the Baptist Church at Rives Junction she was brought down by pneumonia succeeding la grippe. Terrible paroxysms of coughing would last hours with little interruption and it seemed as if she could not survive them. A friend recommended Dr. King's New Discovery; it was quick in its work and highly satisfactory in results. Sold by L. W. Randolph druggist. Regular size 50c and $1; our price 45c and 90c

Exciting Hurdle Riding.

Interest and novel exhibitions of high hurdling were given, both in saddle and bareback, in the Riding Academy last night. Messrs. A. C. Vail, J. W. Johnson, William J. Roome, and J. J. Coard were in saddle, and cleared the hurdles at 4 feet 3 inches. The most exciting feature of the evening was the wonderful performance of Stephenson's famous hunters, Nimrod, Viewhalloa, Glendale and Lyndhurst, which were ridden by Messrs. D. Witherspoon, Branbarui, Fitch and Stephenson, who, mounted bare bareback on the noble animals, cleared the five-foot hurdles amid rounds of applause. The laughter was uproarious when Proprietor Stephenson in executing some especially difficult movements measured his length in the tanbark.

—The total indebtedness of the world is estimated at one hundred billion dollars. Whew! Better keep out of debt by dealing at Peck's cash store.

AN INTERESTING LETTER.

DR. DAVID KENNEDY—Dear Sir—I am 60 years old and generally played out, or so I thought up to two weeks ago, when I commenced to use Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy.

For years I have suffered with inflammation of the bladder and kidneys, and have gradually grown worse. Besides constant pain in the kidneys and bladder, I have had rheumatic in every muscle and joint, and have often remarked that there was not a man living that had suffered as much as I had, but I must say that I had not for a single day in five years felt as well in every way as I do now. Have improved daily since I began the use of Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy. About a week ago I gave a man afflicted with bladder trouble part of a bottle of Favorite Remedy, and he said to me today—"That is a great medicine; I am better already," and he drove eight miles to a druggist to get a bottle. Respectfully yours,

S. I. YOUNG, Hiram, Ohio.

—The Borough Commissioners of Dunellen last night unanimously decided to separate the borough from the township.

—Special oyster sales have been inaugurated at Rogers's seafood market, with much success, and continue to take place Wednesday afternoons and Saturday afternoons and evenings. For cash at those times Rogers sells oysters at 30 cents a quart, and that they are of prime quality is certain since they come from Rogers's.

Rev. John Reid, Jr., of Great Falls, Mon., recommended Ely's Cream Balm to me. I can emphasize his statement. "It is a positive cure for catarrh if used as directed."—Rev. Francis W. Poole, pastor Central Presbyterian Church, Helena, Mon.

It is the medicine above all others for catarrh, and is worth its weight in gold. I can use Ely's Cream Balm with safety and it does all that is claimed for it—B. W. Sperry, Hartford, Conn.

Chapped Hands and Lemon Juice and Glycerine.

Rough, painful, perhaps bleeding hands are bad enough, but what annoys you most is the untidy looks which scrubbing seems only to make worse and which nothing but warm weather will quite remedy. Yet lots of people find relief in a simple mixture prepared by us from lemon juice and glycerine—names which suggest comfort and cure. Glycerine is everywhere used, but people forget the cleansing and whitening properties of lemon juice and its power of neutralizing the bad effect of strong soaps. REYNOLDS'S LEMON JUICE AND GLYCERINE once used is never forgotten. Sprinkler bottles 25c. REYNOLDS'S PHARMACY, Park and North avenues.

GREAT DAMAGE FEARED

The Sudden Thaw Causing the Rivers to Rise.

Much Alarm Felt Along the Monongahela and Allegheny Rivers—Bridges Over the Ohio Washed Away—Floods in West Virginia—People Moving to High Ground.

Pittsburg, Jan. 8.—The Allegheny and Monongahela rivers are rising rapidly. The indications are that much damage to property will be occasioned by the high water and heavy ice. The principal damage, so far, is in the upper pools of the Monongahela river, to unprotected coal boats and loaded coal floats. Both rivers are full of huge cakes of ice and running like torrents.

A great quantity of wreckage is noticed among the ice, indicating destruction of fences and small buildings. Rivermen say that they expect thirty feet of water by to-day noon, with good prospects of much more.

All the boats in the harbor have steam up, doing what they can to escape the rushing ice. The docks at McKeesport, together with the ferryboat Sinclair, broke away yesterday but were captured and tied up. The reports of twenty-five feet of water at lock No. 4 and twenty-three feet at Morgantown almost caused a panic among the coal operators, as this means heavy losses to them.

Along both river fronts in Pittsburg merchants and others whose property is exposed are preparing to vacate. In some places water has already appeared in the sub-cellars and machinery pits. Railroads both east and west are experiencing much trouble from high water. On the Baltimore & Ohio railroad a huge landslide occurred near Connelsville and through traffic was temporarily suspended.

Clearfield, Pa., Jan. 8.—There is a big flood in the Susquehanna river at this point. The ice, which was a foot thick, has broken up and went out without gorging, and the river is rising a foot an hour. Great damage is feared. Rain has fallen steadily since early Sunday morning.

Cincinnati, Jan. 8.—The heaviest rainfall since the establishment of the weather bureau in this city, has been registered. There was a steady downpour Sunday and Sunday night, sweeping the entire mass of snow into the sewers and streams.

The Ohio river began to swell rapidly on Sunday evening, and from that time until the present a rise of nearly fifteen feet is recorded. Considerable damage has been done in the Mill Creek valley. The race track at Lockland is under water, and the aqueduct over the canal is said to be in danger. At Ivorydale, a number of outhouses were washed away. The gardeners in the valley will be heavy losers, as all of their hotbeds are flooded.

Bellaire, O., Jan. 8.—There is every indication of the flood of 1894 being repeated. The river is rising rapidly in consequence of incessant rain for over thirty-six hours. The ice in the Ohio river and its tributaries broke up and ran out yesterday morning. Several barges were lost. Two bridges on the Cleveland, Lorain & Wheeling railroad were washed away. Steamers in their moorings here were not damaged. All the snow has melted and is gone. The lowlands are badly flooded. People are moving to higher grounds.

Clarksburg, W. Va., Jan. 8.—At midnight the West Fork river was fifteen feet two inches above low water and rising rapidly at the headwaters. There is much destruction of property along the line of the river above this place, and particularly at Weston, where the entire lower portion of the valley is reported to be flooded.

At Hinton, W. Va., the New river has gone out of its banks and the lower part of the town is submerged.

At Parkersburg the sudden rise of Little Kanawha upset the steamer Oneida and completely wrecked it. No lives were lost.

Two Bodies Unearthed.

Albany, Jan. 8.—The bodies of two of the victims of the Delavan house fire was unearthed from the ruins last evening. They were found in the debris in the cellar, and were directly under the attic where the fifteen servants are supposed to have been trapped on account of the rapid spread of the flames.

Jackson After Corbett.

Glasgow, Jan. 8.—At a boxing exhibition here last evening Peter Jackson publicly challenged Corbett to meet him and declared that he would not retire from the ring without beating the American champion. His speech was hailed with cries of "That's right!" Jackson has sent no reply to Craige.

Wants $5,000 Damages.

New Haven, Conn., Jan. 8.—Alexander Covert, of this city, has brought suit for $5,000 damages against the New Haven Street Railway company. He was on one of the cars that collided on the Whitney avenue branch of the road on New Year's day and was badly injured.

Big Shoe Factory Resumes.

Dover, N. H., Jan. 8.—The L. P. Dodge company of Newburyport started up its big Dover street shoe shop to-day under the firm name of J. H. Ireland & Co. It expects to employ 800 persons when the shop is running full force. The shop has been idle two years.

The Ging Murder Case.

Minneapolis, Minn., Jan. 8.—The case of C. A. Blixt, the confessed murderer of Catherine Ging, was called yesterday and re-set to Jan. 27, the date of Harry Hayward's trial.

Child Fatally Torn by Dogs.

Pittsburg, Jan. 8.—Maud Williams 16 years old, was attacked by two dogs on Troy Hill, Allegheny, and was so badly injured that she is expected to die.

Judge Hoar Better.

Concord, Mass., Jan. 8.—Judge Hoar spent a comfortable night and it is expected will be allowed to get up for a short time to-day.

GIFTS TO COLUMBIA COLLEGE.

Important Announcements Made by the Board of Trustees.

New York, Jan. 8.—Three important announcements were made at the regular monthly meeting of the board of trustees of Columbia college. Chairman W. C. Schermerhorn, who presided, first announced a subscription of $350,000 from the Messrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt, William K. Vanderbilt Frederick W. Vanderbilt and George W. Vanderbilt for the erection of two additional buildings to the Vanderbilt clinic. He supplemented this announcement with a second to the effect that Mrs. W. D. Sloane, who was a Vanderbilt, and her husband, had subscribed $200,000 for the erection of an addition to the Sloane Maternity hospital. The third announcement was that two gentlemen had guaranteed the necessary half a million dollars for the erection of two new buildings of Columbia college on Riverside Heights. The names of the two gentlemen were withheld.

The gift of Cornelius Vanderbilt and his three brothers is given in memory of their father, William H. Vanderbilt, who built the present Vanderbilt clinic. Mr. Cornelius Vanderbilt and his brothers will also defray the cost of equipping both buildings thoroughly and efficiently.

Mr. and Mrs. Sloane will completely equip the new addition to the Maternity hospital and Mrs. Sloane has guaranteed during her life time to meet all expenses exceeding the present endowment.

Work on the new buildings will be commenced as soon as the weather will permit and will be pushed as rapidly as possible to completion. The board of trustees accepted the gifts with appropriate resolutions.

FOR IRELAND'S WELFARE.

Mr. Gladstone Says the Nationalists Should Forget Their Differences.

London, Jan. 8.—Thomas O'Connor, representing the American organization of the Friendly Sons of St. Patrick, presented to Mr. Gladstone an album with an illuminated address which was prepared in March, 1894 on the occasion of Mr. Gladstone's retirement. Mr. Gladstone received Mr O'Connor and the gentlemen with him very heartily. He looked ruddy and animated and talked with much spirit. After inquiring into the history of the society and its list of members Mr. Gladstone expressed his gratitude for the compliment paid him in the address.

Mr. Gladstone declares his interest in Ireland and the Irish whose cause he said, he should keep at heart to the end of his life. He regretted the divisions in the ranks of Ireland's leaders. The country's chances of obtaining her rights would never be as bright as they ought to be until all nationalists would unite. Domestic discord must mean necessarily the postponemnt of any realization of their claims for their one cause. Everybody in any way able to assist in the reunion of the factions was bound to do so. Anybody promoting discord undertook a terrible responsibility which might mean untold injury to the cause of justice to Ireland. He hoped strongly that some agency soon would be found to unite the national ist groups. He trusted that Ireland's many and influential friends in America should move vigorously for peace in the ranks of the national leaders. They should appeal to the Irish members of the house of commons to forget, for Ireland's welfare, their present differences.

THE STITCHERS' TROUBLES.

No Sign of Giving Up the Contest from Either Side.

Haverhill, Mass., Jan. 8.—At a meeting of the Women Stitchers' union over 100 new members were initiated. Addresses were made by Agent T. T. Pomeroy, James T. Carsy, Miss Mary Mason and David Holmes of England. The latter said the stitchers must take into account that they were not only contending for their own rights, but for women workers everywhere. Arrangements were completed for a big parade this evening.

The state board of arbitration held a conference with labor leaders at union headquarters, but no decisive action was taken. It is understood, however, that the board suggested some plan for settling the trouble, but there seems to be no sign of giving up the contest on either side as yet.

Appraiser McClure's Report.

New York, Jan. 8.—Lawyer David McClure, who, in March, 1893, was appointed appraiser by the surrogate to fix the value of the estate of the late Jay Gould at the time of his death with a view to determining the amount of tax that should be imposed upon the personal property, has made his report, by which he finds the value of the personal estate of the late millionaire to be upwards of $80,000,000.

Tried to Pass Counterfeit Money.

New Haven, Conn., Jan. 8.—John Quesky, a Pole, who gives New York as his place of residence, has been arrested charged with passing as good money a $100 counterfeit bill upon Felix Gelbert, an Oak street grocer. Quesky was about to leave the city when arrested.

Over One Hundred Drowned.

Rio Janeiro, Jan. 8.—There was an explosion on a pleasure steamer off Nictheroy yesterday. The steamer caught fire and scores of passengers were forced to leap overboard to escape the flames. It is reported that over 100 were drowned.

Believed To Be the "Strangler."

Denver, Jan. 8.—Alphonse Lemaire, a vagabond French sailor, who arrived in this city last August from Salt Lake City, is now believed by many to be the "strangler" whose crimes caused such a sensation.

Suicide of a Bandmaster.

TOO TRIVIAL FOR NOTICE

So Judge Ricks Says of the Charges Against Him.

The Memorial Presented to the House of Representatives by S. J. Ritchie, Akron, O., Claims Alleged Conspiracy To Defraud Him of Millions—Ex-Senator Payne Involved.

Cincinnati, Jan. 8.—Judge Ricks, of Cleveland, who is sitting in the court of appeals here, says in reference to the charges made against him yesterday in the house of representatives, that they are too trivial for notice.

He says the case in question was heard by himself and Judge Jackson, now of the supreme court, who concurred in the decision. Later Circuit Judge Turton made a similar decision, sitting with me.

The charges made against Judge Ricks are contained in a memorial presented to the house of representatives, and Representative Johnson, of Ohio, secured immediate consideration for a resolution instructing the judiciary committee to investigate the charges and without debate the resolution was adopted.

The charges are made under oath by S. J. Ritchie, of Akron, O., a wealthy capitalist of that section. While directed mainly at Judge Ricks they indirectly affect Judge Burke and ex-United States Senator Payne, of Cleveland.

The memorial covers twelve typewritten pages and tells of the discovery of valuable copper and nickel deposits at Sudbury Junction in Canada by the memorialist in 1885 which have become of world-wide fame and have supplied all the nickel for armor plates used in the United States navy and by European governments. In order to develop them, to organize corporations and to build a connecting railway, he says he associated with himself Stevenson Burke, Henry B. Payne and Thomas W. Cornell, "who were at that time believed by him to be honorable and trustworthy."

The corporations were known as the Canadian Copper company and Anglo-American Iron company, with principal offices at Cleveland. Mr. Ritchie avers that in 1889 he negotiated in England for the sale of the property for fifteen millions, when his petition alleges his associates "commenced to put into execution a thoroughly planned and infamous scheme to 'rob' himself and his wife, who had the largest interests." To assist them in their designs it is charged Judge Ricks, to whose court a suit was transferred, prostituted his office and became their seubservient and pliant tool.

He charges Burke, Payne and Cornell with having appropriated $2,500,000 of his securities, and says they prevented the sale of the mines, causing him to lose $6,000,000. He charges that Ricks is in the conspiracy, decides adversely to him and his wife, and refuses to let him or his lawyers have access to the books of the concern.

The charges will doubtless be considered by the judiciary committee in connection with those preferred against Judge Ricks by the Cleveland Labor union.

The Demands of the Brooklyn Trolley Men Have Been Refused.

Brooklyn, N. Y., Jan. 8.—The committee appointed by the Brooklyn district assembly of the Knights of Labor to wait upon all the street railroad presidents, in order to make terms for the coming year, has almost completed its work and the result is anything but satisfactory to the employes. They wanted an increase of 25 cents a day in their pay, as well as other concessions from the companies, but were met with a blank refusal in each case.

The committee of the employes will report back to the district assembly to-morrow. Then the report will be submitted to the various local assemblies and they will act upon it before any strike is ordered.

The motormen and conductors of the Brooklyn City railroad held a secret meeting on Sunday and expressed their positive intention of striking unless their demands were acceded to.

Killed by the Cars.

Worcester, Mass., Jan. 8.—Alfred Edwards, for 25 years an employe of the Boston & Maine railroad, as freight agent and afterward messenger for the company, was caught between two freight cars in the Lincoln square yard and instantly killed. He was 55 years old and a war veteran.

Harrisburg, Pa., Jan. 8.—John Eisminger, a murderer who escaped from the jail at Greensburg, has been captured at New Orleans and at the request of District Attorney Roes the governor has telegraphed the governor of Louisiana requesting him to waive the usual formality of a requisition.

[Copyright, 1895, by Bacheller, Johnson & Bacheller.]

The sound was not repeated, and we had nothing to guide us. We found ourselves in a passage communicating with a saloon, small but gorgeously furnished. There was gold and silver plate on the table; curtains of velvet and hangings of silk decorated the walls and doorways; and a carved ebony chest in a corner, with the lid thrown back, showed within a mass of splendid jewelry and other valuables. A sword, its hilt sparkling with precious stones, lay on the floor. The place was like a room in Aladdin's palace. But no sign either of life or death was visible.

We passed through this cabin with only a glance at its contents. There would be time enough for such things later. We entered another passage, and presently came to a square aperture in the floor, opening down into the lower region of the ship. A vertical iron ladder offered a means of descent.

"We may as well take a look below there, colonel," said I, quietly. "Will you remain here, or—"

"Go on, sir!" he answered, through his teeth.

Down we went. An atmosphere as of ages dead and decayed crept into our nostrils. Arrived at the bottom, there was not space to stand upright. I trod on something that caused me to start back. I turned the light of the lantern up and down the floor. They lay in rows, four deep; there may have been two hundred of them in that noisome crypt, forty feet long by twenty wide. They were chained one to another, neck and leg. Their black skin clung to their bones like wrinkled leather. But their sufferings must have been over ages and ages ago. Death had released them from their slavery centuries before the idea of emancipation first dawned in the mind of man.

"I doubt whether that sound could have come from here, colonel; we could hardly have heard it so plainly on the upper deck," I began; but I was interrupted by a repetition of the same plaintive whimper, evidently from above us. The colonel uttered an exclamation, and had scrambled up the ladder before I could turn round. I followed, and found that he had groped his way back to the saloon in the dark.

"It must be here, you know," muttered he, apologetically. "I was sure of it from the first."

I was tempted to compliment him on his activity, but I forbore. I looked round the little saloon. There must be some state-rooms hereabouts. I pushed my hand against one of the silken hangings, and felt a vacancy beyond. I drew the fabric aside, and stepped into a small chamber some twelve feet long by six wide. The colonel was at my heels.

A bed, or bunk, was built against the side of the vessel opposite us. It was covered with drapery of fine cambric, with a satin coverlid. Propped upon the pillows lay a woman between twenty and thirty years of age, apparently, and of remarkable beauty. Her dark hair fell down over her shoulders. Her eyes were closed; but as we entered, they quivered, and slowly opened. Their glance, dark and penetrating, rested on us for an instant, and then they closed once more. A faint sigh stirred the lace upon her bosom, and she lay still.

By her side lay an infant, not more than a few weeks old. The little creature rested on its back; its plump little legs and arms were kicking and brandishing in air. Its eyes were tightly shut; but as we stared upon it, they opened, and it uttered a quavering cry—the cry of a baby just emerging from sleep and in want of its natural nourishment.

"Bless my soul!" faltered the honest colonel. "Bless my soul! A live baby, in the midst of all this!"

I put my finger on the mother's wrist. It was already cold, and there was no pulse. Her beautiful face changed even as we stood there; it became pinched and cadaverous. The figure seemed to sink into itself and wither up. It was as if she had been miraculously preserved during unknown years, until her infant should be saved. But the infant—he was real and substantial; he did not dwindle and vanish before our eyes. The colonel, however, seemed to fear that he would, for he caught him up in his arms and pressed him to his manly, but tender old heart.

"It makes me feel like a man again to get hold of it," quoth he, in a shaken voice, while two tears ran down the side of his warlike nose. "Here's a real piece of warm flesh and blood at last, after all this infernal hobgoblinry. Do, for mercy's sake let us get out of this, before we get turned into mummies and hobgoblins ourselves!"

I looked again at the mother. What a fate had been hers! Who was she? How came she hither? Had her eyes indeed beheld us before she died, or was that an illusion of our bewildered senses? What had her life been on this accursed vessel? Who was the father of this child which she had cherished till the end? Ah, well, it is the doom of man to ask questions, and to guess at the answers. What do we know?

"Yes, we had better go," said I. "The sooner that baby has some woman to look after him the better. His mother will rest here one night more, and we will return in the morning. May she rest in peace, whoever she was!"

We mounted the deck, the colonel bearing the baby, who took the change in his circumstances very composedly. It was a relief to breathe the free air again. The moon had risen higher, and now shone quietly over the deck, and the dusky heaps of mortality that lay upon it seemed no more than shadows of the past. We crossed over the spot where the fallen ratlines hung from the bulwarks, and the colonel was about to clamber over when I stopped him.

"Col. Enderby," I said, "now I come to think of it, there is no necessity for your returning to the shore with me. I am sure you must feel that the dignity of her majesty's service demands that you should remain in charge of this vessel until the authorities at Kingston can be informed of what has occurred. You are leaving the ship in opposition to your sense of duty, merely out of courtesy to me. But I won't allow it! I will go ashore with the baby, and do you stay here till to-morrow. I don't at all mind going alone, and it will be a comfort to me to think that you are out here enjoying the discharge of an obligation which is not the less dear to you because you happen to be on the retired list. Good night!"

But the colonel had me on the arm with a grasp of iron.

"If it will give you any satisfaction to know that I have been and am frightened pretty near out of my senses," said he, "you are welcome to the information. I would no more dare stay here all night alone than . . . . Oh, come on! Have you Yankees no consideration for a chap when he's down?"

"My dear colonel," returned I, "I was just as much scared as you were; all I wished was to come to an understanding. I don't believe that either the British lion or the American eagle will be a bit the worse for our spending the night at your pen; so let us shake hands and say no more about it."

Since that night the colonel has been less overwhelming and more companionable.

I was up early the next morning, but when I stepped out on the porch I found my host already there. He was staring seaward with a blank expression, which remained on his face when he turned to answer my greeting.

"Look yonder!" said he, pointing to the reef. "Gone! She's gone, sir, by Jove! bag and scrip. Not a chip of her left."

I looked, and neither on the reef nor anywhere within the sweep of the horizon could I discern any trace of the mysterious vessel of the night before. Yet there had been no breath of wind from then till now.

"She's gone," he repeated; "and Charles tells me that the men have been over there and say that there's nothing left of her, either under water or above it. Now, what do you make of it?"

"Colonel," I replied, after a pause, "have you got that baby still?"

"Indeed, I have," cried the veteran. "He's just dropped asleep, after getting a good breakfast out of that young Sally of mine, you know, who—ahem! Oh, yes—I've got him all right!"

"Then we may take our own breakfast with a free mind," said I. "It is the way of ships to pass in the night, and, for my part, I think it was high time for her to be off, don't you?"

"By Jove, my boy, that I do!" cried the colonel, heartily; and, grasping my hand, he led me in to breakfast; coffee and rolls, and a couple of soft-boiled eggs apiece.

Just as we had finished, and were thinking of retiring to our rooms to lay aside our pajamas and start for the beach, Charles modestly entered, bearing in his arms a battered and water-soaked fragment of old black plank, with the half-effaced remains of some inscription on it.

"De men find it on de beach dis mo'nin', sah," he explained. "T'ink it come off de wreck, sah. T'ink you might like to take a look at it, sah, Massa Cun'l, sah."

At the colonel's direction he placed the fragment on a chair, so that the light fell upon the writing. We set ourselves to decipher it.

"Looks to me like 'Vainquere,' eh? What do you make it?" said the colonel, at length.

"I think it's 'La Valliere,' answered I. "She was one of Louis Quatorze's—er—court, you know."

"I fancy you've got it," assented he. "And now I think of it, 'La Valliere' was the name of one of the ships of that scoundrel DuCasse's fleet!"

"Then that completes the chain of evidence. But don't you think," I added, "that, considering the circumstance, it will be just as well if we don't say anything publicly about this affair. I mean, better not enter into details, and that sort of thing. You see, we have no actual proof, even the baby proves nothing, except to ourselves; and folks are apt to be skeptical."

"I fully agree with you," returned the colonel, earnestly. "The truth is, I was going to suggest a little—er—prudence, myself. We know what we know; and we don't want to be bothered with the questions and guesses of a lot of asses who know nothing. By the way, come in and have a look at him. He's a beauty, I tell you! And I'll lay you the odds he's no Frenchman. Softly, now, or you'll wake him."

We tip-toed in, and there he lay, pink and soft, breathing gently, in his little impromptu crib, with sable Sally grinning beside him.

"He's an Englishman, every inch of him," exclaimed the colonel, beneath his breath. "And his mother is an English woman, did you notice her eyes? Dark gray, English eyes—Lancashire eyes; I ought to know, for I am a Lancashire boy myself, and there was a girl I might have married, if I hadn't been a fool, who looked just like her."

"And who was the baby's father, do you think?"

"An Englishman, of course," replied the colonel, indignantly; "an English colonial, at all events. Wasn't I telling you yesterday afternoon that those infernal pirates murdered the men and carried off the women? Very well; now, my idea is, that this child—that his mother—that this child, I say, was born immediately after his mother was carried on board, owing to the fright and agitation, you understand; and that he saved his mother's honor by being born at that time."

"But, colonel, that was two hundred years ago," I objected.

"Well, sir, and what if it was? There are miracles in the Bible, and I believe in the Bible! And could a miracle be performed in a better cause than this? I believe there was a miracle; and I believe in that woman, and in her baby; and he shall be my baby, now, and whatever I possess shall be his, when I'm gone; that's my last will and testament!"

"Will you let me have the honor of being his godfather?" I asked.

To this proposal the colonel gave a cordial assent; and I am to send the little heir a silver mug next month.

The reader of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly on the blood and mucous surface of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer $100 for any case that it fails to cure.

Its Enlarged Opportunities in Its Elegant New Home.

The Young Men's Christian Association of Plainfield was organized in 1867, and moved into its handsome new home on the last day of 1894. The building is situated on the corner of East Front street and Watchung avenue. It is especially designed for the Association, and well adapted to its use. Its entire length is 146 feet, and its width is 61 feet. On the ground floor front are two large stores, and immediately in the rear, the large assembly hall, which, in beauty, rivals any other in this section of the country. On the second floor the reception room, Secretary's office, court room, reading room, library, members' parlor and small halls are situated.

The gymnasium is a wing of the main building, and is entered through the reception room. It is 64 feet long and 35 feet wide, with locker room, plunge, and other baths, and bowling alleys occupying the same space immediately under it.

On the third floor are three class-rooms, two rooms for the boys department, a committee room, and an amusement room. In the basement is a wheel-room for the use of members.

The work of the association is carried on through the following departments: The Social, Physical, Educational, Spiritual, and Junior.

The advantages of the Social Department are the reception room, a pleasant and comfortably furnished parlor, and a game room, with a reception committee, which is ever ready to help make pleasant an evening, in attendance.

The Physical Department is well equipped with new and the most modern apparatus, with bathe and lockers equally well arranged. The physical director is a man of wide experience in physical training, and thoroughly competent to fill his place. A careful examination is made on entering the gymnasium, and work especially helpful to the applicant is prescribed.

The Educational Department, although comparatively new, is doing good work. Ninety-four different men are now registered, and new classes are being organized. A pleasant reading room, affords a goodly number of periodicals, magazines, daily New York and Plainfield papers, and religious weeklies, and a library of various classes of literature, free to all in the reading room, but only members of the association can take them away.

The Spiritual department gives religious services on Sundays and week days, weekly Bible, and Training classes, a daily morning prayer meeting and personal work, besides the influence of association with Christian men. The Spiritual is the most important part of the work of the Association, and must ever be kept at the front.

The Junior Department admits boys between the ages of 12 and 16. The rooms are used for reading and games, while others are used on special occasions, such as sociables, practical talks, entertainments, etc.

Public-Spirited Jersey Central.

If none is given he will exercise his prerogative and accept the agreement and surrender the right of the State to take the company's railroad at an appraised valuation.

A Great Shoot in Progress.

When T. H. Keller of Plainfield sets out to do a thing, it 's bound to be a go. This is again proved by the success assured to the shoot he has been arranging for tomorrow and Friday, to take place at the headquarters of the Climax Gun Club, Fanwood, and which promises to be one of the largest meetings ever held in this section. Prominent shooters from several States have signified their intention of participating. The tournament is likely to rival the tournaments of the famous Middlesex Gun Club, whose meetings always brought together the shooting cracks of the country. The first day will be devoted to shooting at Empire targets, the second day at live birds. Among the distinguished guests already arriving are O. G. Dickey of Boston, H. G. Wheeler and B. LeRoy Woodland, J. T. Mascroft, Mayor of Sutton, Mass., and V. D. Kennerson and W. L. Davis of Worcester.

Everything at Cut Prices.

In order to facilitate their "stock taking", and to make the labor as light as possible, L. Bamberger & Co., 147-149 Market street, Newark, are holding a "January Clearing Sale", so as to reduce every department to at least half its present size. They recognize the fact that now, after the great buying of Christmas time, unless big bargains are given, purchasing will be light, and they have accordingly cut the price of everything in their big establishment, excepting a few articles whose price is regulated by special agreements, to a lower point than was ever before known. Economical shoppers will be sure to grasp so unusual a chance, for it means the opportunity to buy not only all sorts of needed wearables, but also such things as muslins, flannels, hosiery, linens, men's furnishings, etc., goods whose prices seldom change, at real bargains figures. The sale will continue for some days, for the stock is so vast that it cannot be reduced to the desired limits in a short time.

—Don't fail to call on Fulper the grocer this week and save money. He sells good, sweet, fresh butter as low as 18 cts.

THE LAW SHOULD BE CHANGED.

Injustice to the Taxpayers of the System by Which the People Are Charged $3 a Day as Each Freeholder Wills.

New Brunswick, Jan. 8—At the investigation today of the methods of the Board of Freeholders, Capt. Joseph Castner, who has been a member of the Board from the Fifth ward, this city, for several terms, admitted that he had charged the county 301 days out of 365 for work that sometimes involved no more labor than walking across a bridge and "seeing that the grass was kept green". Capt. Castner answered the question, "Were there any days for which you did not charge the county $2 ?" with "Oh, yes, I went fishing six days and I did not charge for them."

Freeholder Kelly said that he had charged the county $2 for writing an order for a pair of shoes for a jail prisoner, and that he had often charged $2 for simply walking over the Albany street bridge, although the work on that structure had been completed and there were bridge tenders there.

It was brought out that members of the County Records Committee had put in a total of 411 days at $2 a day supervising the work of two girls and a man while they bound the records. The binding cost about $300 and the supervision over $800.

Parks Badly Beaten.

On the Elizabeth Athletic Club alleys last evening an interesting game was rolled between the Parks and the E. A. C's, resulting in a decided victory for the Elizabethans, though the Parks fought hard and had the satisfaction of scoring the largest individual total of the evening, that of Leonard, who steadily climbed to 205. The result, however, was a victory for the E. A. C's by 271 pins.

NEW JERSEY LEGISLATURE.

Its Organization Effected, and a Week's Adjournment Taken.

The organization of the Legislature was quietly affected amid a floral display in both Houses that exceeded anything of the kind seen in Trenton before. In the Senate the Senators elect took part in the temporary organization, thus conforming to the Supreme Court's decision and the contention made by the Republicans in the fight for control last year. For years it has been the practice of the old Secretary to call the Senate to order and put the preliminary motions. Senator Voorhees, a hold-over Senator, performed that function, and called the roll of Senators and Senators-elect from a certified list he had procured from the Secretary of State.

Senator Stokes was made President, and Henry B. Rollison Secretary. In his speech in assuming the chair, Senator Stokes intimated that the charges of malfeasance in furnishing supplies and work to the State would be investigated. Senator Ketcham of Essex has a resolution ordering such an investigation, but will not offer it until an understanding is reached as to the methods to be pursued in conducting the inquiry. Senator Daly of Hudson offered a new rule, intended to prevent committees from smothering bills and requiring reports to be made within a week after the bill reaches the committee. It goes over for a week.

Senator Voorhees introduced the first bill. It provides for the abolition of the present county courts and of lay judges and the creation of new courts to be presided over by a single law judge elected by the people. The present judges continue in office till next December.

Senator Winton introduced two bills that carry out the Governor's recommendations for the preservation of the Palisades. Senator Daly presented the Jersey City water bill.

In the house Joseph Cross of Union County was elected Speaker and James Parker of Passaic Clerk. Mr. Codding of Union County presented a proposed amendment to the Constitution prohibiting bookmaking, betting, and all kinds of gambling on race tracks. The law already prohibits it. A resolution was adopted fixing Tuesday next at 4 as the time for receiving from Rev. Dr. Everard Kempshall of Elizabeth and William M. Lanning the petition from the New Jersey Presbyterian Synod asking for the amendment.

Bills were introduced as follows: By Graber, providing for dollar gas in first-class cities; by Schober, providing that last year's Atlantic City charter law shall not apply to Newark and Jersey City; by Drake, giving Governing Boards of first-class cities power to abolish grade crossings of railroads; by Nutzhorn, providing for two-cent ferriage between New Jersey and other States; by Schober, taxing railroads and canals at local rates; by Drake, abolishing days of grace; by Ginder, providing that only native or naturalized citizens shall be employed on public works; by Graber, providing dollar gas in second class cities, and also one making ten consecutive hours a day's work on electric and street railways; by Eisel, to prevent usury by persons lending money on chattel mortgages, and making the penalty $1,000 fine or two years imprisonment; by Olcutt, repealing the Democratic Freeholders's laws of 1889 and 1892, which relate to Hudson and Essex counties; by Bates, requiring the death penalty to be inflicted in the State prison under direction of the prison keeper.

Both Houses adjourned for the week.

The Governor's Message.

Governor Werts's second annual message is a plain presentation of such matters in the State government as he considers worthy of legislative attention.

The financial statement may be briefly stated thus: The State has $891,000 of assets in its sinking fund wherewith to pay the remaining war debt of $735,400, when that debt shall become due. There is no other bonded and floating indebtedness. There is a balance in bank of $486,855.91, and the receipts of the present fiscal year are estimated at $2,042 870, while the disbursements for the same period are figured at $2,017,605 86.

The recommendation for the erection of an intermediary prison is made with great force and directness.

The great question of the public water supply is treated with vigor and candor, and the recommendations should be well considered by the Legislature.

All of the points of the message discover the fact that Gov. Werts has given to the subjects presented careful consideration and inquiry, and that each of his suggestions is for the betterment of some element of the State's institutions and elements. He disapproves the proposed initiative or referendum legislation, saying it is no argument that while it may work in Switzerland it would be advantageous in New Jersey.

—Wm. H. Hall went home from his work at Thorpe & Ivins's last night and found that his wife had left his shelter and protection and gone to live with her mother. They had had some differences, and now he advertises that he will not be responsible for debts contracted by her.

GESANG AND TURN VEREIN.

Leader Schrader Presented with a Handsome Baton and Purse.

A happy party of the members and friends of the Gesang and Turn Verein Society gathered in their hall last evening and made merry until a late hour. Nearly two hundred were present, and after a musical entertainment by active members of the society, dancing and bowling were enjoyed. Throughout the evening refreshments were served in the supper room and everyone availed themselves of this excellent part of the evening's enjoyment.

The feature of the evening, however, was the presentation to Richard Schrader, the popular leader of the society, of an elegant writing desk, a handsome baton and a large purse, last evening being the occasion of his 30th birthday.

Mr. Schrader, though taken completely by surprise, feelingly thanked his many friends for their generous remembrances and expressed his desire to serve them as satisfactorily in the future as he had endeavored to in the past. His remarks were greeted with uproarious applause.

The society again demonstrated last evening their ability to give their friends a most enjoyable time.

28TH ANNIVERSARY.

Sons of Temperance Spend an Evening in Pleasant Celebration.

The members and friends of Howell Division, No. 97, Sons of Temperance, gathered in Reform Hall last night to listen to an interesting entertainment and enjoy the bountiful collation which followed. It was unfortunate that this, their twenty-sixth anniversary, was held on such a stormy night, as the programme was worthy of a much larger audience. After an ode by the members of the order and an invocation by Rev. Dr. A. H. Lewis, a cordial address of welcome was delivered by P. G. W. P. Jas. R. Perrine, in which he touched on the history of the local division since its institution, and spoke of its great benefit to members.

A song by Elmer Runyon was enthusiastically received and he was obliged to respond to the hearty encore. Mrs. C. Steiner was followed by a piano solo by Mrs. King, after which Miss Alice Scribner recited "No Drunkard Enters There" in a very effective manner. Most Worthy Patriarch M. M. Eavenson and Grand Worthy Patriarch A. P. Sutphen both then delivered very interesting addresses and were followed by Miss Try Mattox whose recitation, "The Inventor's Wife", was enjoyed by all. Dr. A. H. Lewis made the closing address. A tableau, in three parts, representing the rescue of the drunkard, was effectively rendered by Miss Mattox, George Rockfellow, James R. Perrine, Miss Katie Glen, Harry Mattox, and Edie Mattox. During the tableau the emblems of the the national and subordinate organizations were effectively displayed.

The collation was then discussed, and it was at a late hour when the happy party dispersed.

BURNING OF A CLUB HOUSE.

Quick Work of Flames in South Orange.

The house of the South Orange Field Club was totally destroyed by fire at 6 this morning, resulting in a loss of about $5 000 on the building and contents. The fire is supposed to have been caused by an overheated stove.

The club recently put in new bowling alleys, at a cost of $2,800, and they were destroyed with the rest of the building. The janitor of the building, Morris Burns, lived at the club-house with his family, and they had a narrow escape. He flung his two children out of the bedroom window into the snow, and then he and his wife jumped out of the window.

Some excitement was caused during the fire by the explosion of a cask of gasoline which was kept in an outhouse on the premises, and also by the discharge of a number of cartridges belonging to the gun club. The building was insured for $3 000, so that the net loss to the club will not exceed $2,000.

MATT QUAY BEATEN.

His Man for Mayor Turned Down in Philadelphia.

Philadelphia, Jan. 9—City Solicitor Chas. F. Warwick has been nominated by the Republican city convention for Mayor, to succeed Edwin S. Stuart.

Two months ago Senator Matthew Stanley Quay slated State Senator Boise Penrose for the nomination in spite of the protests of the local leaders.

Warwick is about 42 years old, and belongs to the Philadelphia clique rather than the State or Quay clique.

It is a black eye for Quay.

"The Finderne."

They have also secured, as manager, A. E. White, a caterer of wide experience in the management of resorts whose registers contain the names of many of the most well known pleasure seekers; his latest success being the management for three years of "The Gladys Inn", one of the most popular of the popular "Mountain Resorts of Virginia", and owned by the Chesapeake and Ohio Railway Company, than whose hostleries none better managed are to be found on the continent. "The Finderne" was opened for the year 1895, on Thursday, January 3, and will be maintained in the highest order of excellence as a resort, no pains or expense will be spared to this end. Highest of all in Leavening Power.—Latest U. S. Gov't Report

Royal Baking Powder

ABSOLUTELY PURE

THE TURKISH SIDE OF IT

Official Reports Deny the Armenian Outrages.

Not True That the Governor of Bitlis Recruited Soldiers Among the Kurds.—The Porte Asked to Suspend Him by England, France and Russia.

Washington, Jan. 9.—The Turkish legation has received this official communication from Constantinople:

"It is indeed strange to observe the unwillingness on the part of some newspapers to wait and see what the Sassoun troubles really were and who was actually responsible for them. The sublime porte has taken all the precautionary measures necessitated by the case, and there cannot possibly remain any reasonable doubt, if not perhaps, in the minds of revolutionists and their friends, that the appointed commission to investigate this affair will bring about facts as they are in reality. The assertions already made by people connected with revolt in Turkey, all so numerous and so shockingly erroneous that it is truly impossible to answer them all. It is not true that the governor of Bitlis recruited soldiers amongst the Kurds. It is not true that women and children were massacred. On the contrary, they were protected by the soldiery, as it was the case, for instance, with the women near Kukuzat. All cattle was also restituted to their owners in conformity with strict orders from the Bitlis authorities. The assertion made that twenty-four villages were burned is simply preposterous, as no twenty-four villages are to be found round about the place where the revolt first broke out. In that region there are no more than ten villages, some of which were set on fire by the revolutionists themselves who acted exactly according to Rev. Cyrus Hamlin's prophetic statement of the 23d of December, 1893: 'The Armenian (Heutchagrist) bands, organized all over the empire, will watch their opportunities to kill Kurds and Turks, set fire to their villages and then make their escape into the mountains.' It is not true either that garments of priests and objects belonging to churches were publicly sold at Moush.

London, Jan. 9.—The Standard's correspondent in Constantinople says: "The sultan has formally applied to Great Britian to disavow Mr. Gladstone's recent speech with reference to Armenia.

"England, France and Russia have asked the porte to suspend the governor of Bitlis until the investigation has been concluded. The porte has not replied. It is believed that the porte will endeavor to maintain the governor in his post."

The Standard's Vienna correspondent says he has learned from an unimpeachable source that the services of the patriarch Azarian have been enlisted to secure a verdict of not proven in the Sassoun inquiry, to which all of the porte's energies are directed. Azarian has undertaken to instruct the vicar of Moush to enjoin his flock to testify before the commission favorably to the Turkish officials. "Such conduct by Armenian Catholics will appear strange to Englishmen," the correspondent says, "but anybody who has resided in the east is well aware of the gulf dividing the branches of the Armenian family."

STAMP DEALERS ARE SAFE.

Their Album Plates Cannot Be Seized by the Government.

St. Louis, Jan. 9.—Chief of Secret Service Hazen recently issued instructions to Operative Murphy, of this city, to seize all plates issued by publishers of stamp albums in printing their books, because they contained illustrations of foreign stamps. Murphy, in attempting to carry out these instructions, met with a flat refusal from two St. Louis publishers of stamp albums.

It is said that United States Prosecuting Attorney W. H. Clopton has prepared an opinion, which has been forwarded to the secret service at Washington, that there is no authority under the United States statutes to seize the plates, unless it could be shown that they had been used for counterfeiting.

Gresham Dined the President.

Chicago, Jan. 9.—Mrs. Ida Weinberger, shrouded in her bridal robes, lies in a coffin at 619 Seminary avenue. She kissed her husband good-bye yesterday morning, locked herself in the little home and drank enough carbolic acid to kill a regiment of men. Temporary insanity the cause.

Death Chair Awaiting Him.

New York, Jan. 9.—Murderer Cram was sentenced yesterday to be electrocuted during the week of Feb. 25, for wife murder, after an appeal the lawyer asked for a new trial on the ground of insanity, which was denied.

A Conciliatory Policy.

City of Mexico, Jan. 9.—The Guatemalan minister following instructions from his government, is pursuing a very conciliatory policy. The indications are that the boundary dispute will be settled peaceably.

HE WAITED FOR ARREST.

Took Louis Williams 15 Hours to Get Locked Up in Chicago.

Chicago, Jan. 9.—Driven desperate by hunger and lack of sleep, Louis Williams resorted to crime in order to find shelter and food in a police station. And then he only succeeded in his purpose after he had walked to the Harrison street station, told the story of his offenses and had his tale investigated by the police. It took him fifteen hours to get locked up.

Williams comes from Brooklyn, where, until a few months ago, he held a clerkship in a drygoods store. Coming to Chicago he got a precarious existence until this week, when he became desperate, and in order to be locked up broke a plate glass window in Tillenburg's saloon, gathering in two bottles of whiskey which he traded for two sandwiches in a neighboring restaurant.

Knowing it was only a temporary relief, Williams determined to continue his efforts to be arrested and again took up his station in front of the saloon from which he had stolen the whiskey. He waited until daylight, but not a policeman appeared to lock him up.

Yesterday he walked to the Harrison street station, and detailed his story, and finally accomplished his object, being locked up on charges preferred by the saloon keeper.

OUT WITH A GUN.

Horsewhipping Has No Terrors for a Michigan Editor.

Ashley, Mich., Jan. 9.—The editor of the News, C. E. Armstrong, who was horsewhipped by Cora Hasbrook and who choked his assailant until she desisted, surprised the village yesterday by going to the postoffice carrying a Winchester rifle and two revolvers and a belt filled with cartridges. Nobody molested him, and later his paper came out with the following announcement, referring to persons who would harm him:

"To all such persons we will say that we long ago learned to have no fear of leaden messages; in fact, a good part of our life has been spent among people who generally shot first and blowed about it afterward."

To the woman he said:

"Horsewhips hold no fear for us, and right here, old girl, let us rise to remark that if any of your sneaking, low-lived gang wish to try that kind of medicine on us again we warn you that all it will cost them will be their own doctor bills. We have started to purge this locality, and we will do it, or die in the attempt."

The better class of Ashley people is with the editor.

INDIAN AGENTS' AFFAIRS.

Probable That Steps Will Be Taken To Readjust Their Salaries.

Washington, Jan. 9.—There has been no conference between the Indian agents and the secretary of the interior. Secretary Smith will arrange a day for them to visit the president and have a discussion in regard to Indian affairs.

While the agents have made no official request, it is probable that steps will be taken to readjust their salaries. It is understood that the secretary of the interior is in favor of an increase in their pay and may make such a recommendation to congress.

There are now about 57 Indian agents throughout the country and about one-half of them are army officers who of recent years have been selected to act as agents instead of civilians as heretofore. The officers, of course, will receive their regular army pay. The civilian agents now receive from $1,200 to $1,800 and the increase will likely be to $2,500 as a maximum and $1,800 as the lowest figure.

During the past year more army officers have been appointed agents than previously. It seems to be the policy of the department to place them in charge when the opportunity affords.

Ten Bodies Uncovered.

Albany, Jan. 9.—Workmen continued excavation work at the scene of the Delavan hotel ruins. So far ten bodies or rather what remained of them, have been uncovered. The three last bodies found were more intact than those already uncovered. All the bodies were unearthed in the cellar directly under the attic where the victims of the fire are supposed to have been quartered. Three of the bodies were near mattresses when found, showing that the persons were asleep when they met death.

A Peculiar Fatal Accident.

New Haven, Conn., Jan. 9.—Peter McKenna, aged 55 years, a teamster, met with a peculiar fatal accident yesterday. While driving into the yard at 73 Nash street, a telephone wire which had become unfastened and hung down caught the man under the chin breaking his neck.

Mysterious Disappearance.

Lowell, Mass., Jan. 9.—James Chamberlain, janitor of the Vesper club house, disappeared a week ago Monday. He left the club house saying that he would return in half an hour, but nothing has been learned of his whereabouts since. No reason is assigned for his absence.

CUP CONDITIONS CLOSE

The Formal Acceptance of Dunraven's Challenge.

The Recognition of the Deed of Gift and the Agreement To Accept the Custody of the Cup, in Case a British Boat Wins, the Only Point of Contention.

New York, Jan. 9.—The American Cup committee have formally accepted the Dunraven challenge of December 6, subject to the modifications made by late cable.

There were present at the meeting Commodore Smith, chairman; A. Cass Canfield, secretary; Latham A. Fish, J. Frederick Tams, and Gouverneur Kortwright. The cablegrams received from Secretary Grant of the Royal Yacht squadron, were read and were deemed satisfactory.

The recognition of the deed of gift, under which the cup is held, and the agreement to accept the custody of the cup, subject to the deed, in case a British boat wins, covered the only point in contention, and the committee drafted the following cablegram, which was sent after the meeting adjourned:

"Grant, Cowes:

"Terms of challenge as modified by your cable of 7th inst. are accepted.

Smith, Chairman."

This closes the international contest of sea lawyers as to the terms and conditions under which the races of 1895 are to be sailed. The cup committee have insisted upon a different challenge from that under which the races of 1893 were sailed, for the reason that considerable uncertainty existed as to the holding of the cup for future races.

They did not want to give the Britons a chance to take the cup over to English waters and lay courses for the next international race such as the Vigilant sailed over last summer and met with defeats by yachts her inferiors in open waters.

Lord Dunraven desired a race with conditions to be arranged under the mutual agreement clause of the deed of gift and nothing said about the holding of the cup in case he won. The inference drawn from this on this side of the water was that the British yachtmen would not recognize the deed of gift in future races and would not lay down fair terms under the mutual agreement clause.

After two months' negotiating by letter and by cable, the Royal Yacht squadron has recognized the deed of gift, and while the America's Cup committee has made some concession, it has won a signal victory.

The arrangements for the races will now be pushed with vigor on both sides of the water.

Lord Dunraven will build a new Valkyrie eighty-nine feet on the load-water line. She is supposed to be already completed on paper, and for all the public know actual construction may have been begun by Watson, her designer.

Nothing definite is decided as to the new cup defenders to be built here. It is expected, however, that E. D. Morgan, George Jay Gould, C. Oliver Iselin, August Belmont, and some of the other wealthy members of the New York Yacht club will get their heads together in a few days, form a syndicate, and give Nat Herreshoft carte blanche to build a ninety-footer that will beat the world.

Commodore Smith said that he has heard nothing definite about the syndicate or about the refitting of the Jubilee, Colonia and Vigilant. He said he did not think that Lord Dunraven will permit the substitution of the boat now building on the Clyde for A. B. Walker. This boat cannot compete if she is over ninety feet and it is thought that she will exceed that limit. The fact that she is nearly ready for launching is in her favor, but Commodore Smith was of the opinion that Lord Dunraven himself wants the honor of taking the cup to England if it is to go back this year.

Starvation Story Denied.

Wilkesbarre, Pa., Jan. 9.—The starvation story sent out from here to the effect that there is unusual distress and miners are starving, is not true. There are always cases of poverty in this region, but the charitable organizations are well able to care for them. The mines have been working with accustomed regularity, and there is now no more poverty than there has been for years in the past. Some miners with large families have a hard time getting along but those in real want are cared for by the public charities. There are no cases of starvation.

Pay Director Washington Dead.

Washington, Jan. 9.—Pay Director Richard Washington, of the navy, who resided with his wife at the Portland hotel in this city, died suddenly of apoplexy. He entered the service from Virginia Aug. 14, 1861, and was appointed general inspector of the pay corps April 26, 1890.

Mines Resume Work.

Ishpeming, Mich., Jan. 9.—The Winthrop mines has resumed work with one hundred men after a year's idleness. The force will be increased to three hundred by the opening of the shipping season next May.

ASK THEM WHY?

Ask the men who are making imitations of COTTOLENE, the new vegetable shortening, why they give up lard and try to trade on the merits of COTTOLENE? Perhaps YOU can guess why.

ASK HIM WHY?

Ask the grocer who attempts substitution, why he tries to sell an imitation when people call for that pure, palatable and popular vegetable shortening, COTTOLENE? Perhaps YOU can guess.

ASK YOURSELF WHY?

Why should not YOU use COTTOLENE, instead of lard or any other compound, for all cooking purposes? It has the highest possible endorsement; from Physicians as to healthfulness; from Cooking Experts as to superiority; from housekeepers as to economy. Use COTTOLENE and stick to it.

A Great Achievement.

25,000 Physicians of One Mind.

Food for Strength First.—Medicine for Cure Second.—The Least Food that will give Most Nourishment, the Kind.

In this enlightened age, the old theory held by physicians to get as much medicine in the least possible time into the system of a patient, even at the expense of stomach, blood, brains, nerves, and often, in the end, life itself—has been abandoned.

The old way was to "dose." If the patient had a tremendous constitution, he sometimes "pulled through;" if not, which was more often the case, that special disease was considered more dangerous, as it had claimed another for its own.

But this is all changed now. All prominent physicians agree on one subject, anyway. It is this—build the patient up first, give him new blood and strength, add flesh to his bones. He's then ready to receive the benefit of proper medical treatment.

To do this effectually, that must be given which will, in the least quantity, produce the greatest amount of vitality,—not a stimulant which quickly reacts disastrously, but a genuine food, a muscle, bone, and blood maker. Such a food was long sought for, and at last discovered in that original and only raw food extract—Bovinine.

By the use of this wonderful life-generating preparation, every organ of the body becoming strengthened by nourishment, naturally begins to perform its ordinary functions, and at once the patient is on the road to recovery.

It is this result, obtained in hundreds of cases where Bovinine has been used, that has caused its indorsement by 25,000 prominent physicians in America.

In addition, thousands who have been benefited can vouch for the wonderful results obtained by the use of Bovinine, for invalids, the old, convalescents, the over-worked, or, in fact, all who have found it necessary to maintain strength, flesh, and vigor.

THE SECRET OF LONG LIFE.

The Rules Which Govern Are All Different.

Barthélemy Saint-Hilaire, the famous French scholar and politician, who recently entered on his ninetieth year full of physical and intellectual vigor, has been telling the inevitable interviewer how it is his days have been so long in the land. It is, we are told, the effect of strict adherence to the old precept, "early to bed and early to rise," with steady work during waking hours.

Every grand old man seems to have a secret of his own. Mr. Gladstone, we believe, attributes his longevity to his habit of taking a daily walk in all weathers and to his giving 32 bites to every morsel of food. Oliver Wendell Holmes pinned his faith on equability of temperature. The late Major Knox Holmes swore by the tricycle, which, in the end, was the cause of his death. Dr. P. H. Van der Weyde, an American octogenarian, not long ago offered himself "as an example of the benign influence of the study and practice of music."

Some aged persons give the credit of their long lives to abstinence from tobacco, alcohol, meat, or what not; others to their indulgence in all these things. One old lady, of whom we read not long ago as having reached the age of 120 or thereabouts, maintained that single blessedness is the real elixir vitæ, and she ascribed the death of a brother at the tender age of 90 to the fact that he had committed matrimony in early life.

M. Ferdinand de Lesseps believed in horse riding. Mr. James Payn complains that in his boyhood he "got a little bored with too much horse." In a letter recently published, M. De Lesseps delivered himself on the subject as follows: "I shall always be deeply grateful to Larine, my riding master, who from my earliest years made me share his keen passion for horses, and I am still convinced that daily horse exercise has in a large measure been the means of enabling me to reach my eighty-fourth year in perfect health." Carlyle was also a great rider almost to the end of his long life, and he not only rode, but, we believe, groomed his horse himself.

On the whole, it must be concluded that the real secret of longevity is a sound constitution prudently husbanded. The only general rules that can be laid down are those set forth by Adam in "As You Like It:"

Though I look old, yet I am strong and lusty,
For in my youth I never did apply
Hot and rebellious liquors in my blood,
Nor did not with unbashful forehead woo
The means of weakness and debility;
Therefore my age is as a lusty winter,
Frosty but kindly. —Home Journal.

THE SAVAGE'S COSTUME.

Sealskin Is Unhygienic and Worn Only By the Purse-Proud.

The Society of Art and Science of Brooklyn, is often treated to some startling bit of advanced thought at its regular meetings.

Recently Dr. Brown took up the subject of hygienic dress. She recommended woolen garments as the best for underwear, but condemned wool, hardened by washing and shrinking, as it thus became impervious to air or moisture. Considering the careful washing which all wool garments require in order to have them retain their hygienic qualities, Dr. Brown recommended wool mixed with silk or cotton as best for general use. She also said women who wore long-necked sleeveless undergarments in winter, thinking that they would be less apt to take cold when it was necessary to put on decollete costume, made a grave mistake.

She put the hygienic value of sealskin and other fur coats at a great discount, declaring they ought never to be worn except during severe, long-continued exposure to cold, and never while walking.

"Collars, cuffs, and muffs of furs," Dr. Brown said, "are all right, and I wonder men do not avail themselves more of the æsthetic fur collar for their overcoats. They are certainly becoming. The fur animals, however, which women have worn so much lately tight about the throat are bad, causing the throat to become extremely sensitive.

Dr. Brown denounced the dress of the average fashionable woman in vigorous terms, and even had a few words of censure for the attire of man, declaring that the conventional stiff shirt and collar, the silk hat, and stiff hats were very uncomfortable.

Many men had told her so, and how they rejoiced in getting into the mountains, where they indulged in knickerbockers, leather leggings, and flannel shirts. Still, man's dress at it worst was not to be compared to woman's for uncomfortableness and injury to the wearer.

"Take a savage," said she, dress him in knickerbockers, flannel shirt, and soft hat, and he would probably still find something in life worth living for; dress him in the conventional business suit of men, and you would make him decidedly unhappy as well as uncomfortable; but put him in the attire of a modern fashionable woman—squeeze his twenty-five inch middle into nineteen inches of steel bands, pressing his stomach against his wabbly heart and gasping lungs, and compressing his elastic ribs against his liver; then put upon him all the other garments that are considered necessary with all their hooks, straps, bands, buttons and pins; cover these with a skirt ten yards around the bottom, weighed down with several pounds of haircloth, a bodice with sleeves 2 1-2 feet in circumference, and over all this a wrap, and put on his head a creation varying in size from a tea saucer to a cart wheel, put in his hand an umbrella, purse and handkerchief—because, of course, there is no pocket in the dress—send him out shopping on a rainy day, have him endeavor to hold up the skirts and walk in shoes with high heels and toes the size of thimbles, expect him to keep his temper and be smiling, and then ask him if he would rather be a lovely civilized woman or a howling savage, and see what he'll say to you."

"Dr. Brown urged that one great step in the emancipation of woman was to free her from the follies of her dress. The average bride, she said, spent so much energy preparing her trousseau that she fell into her husband's arms a bundle of hysterics and millinery. The wearing of mourning attire, she said, was unhygienic.

The short skirt for rainy days was advocated.

Dr. Brown said, in conclusion, that if women would only use common sense they would find it possible to combine both beauty and hygiene in the matter of dress, not appear unfashionable, and avoid many ills to which they are at present subject.

WOLF-SOLANGE.

"Are you looking at Wolf-Solange, young gentlemen?" asked a voice behind us.

It was our host, who had been detained inside by the arrival of a patient, and who now rejoined us. Of course, we asked him who Wolf-Solange was, and how she came by such a strange name, and, in reply he told us the following story:

"Wolf-Solange, whose proper name is Solange Grillet, maiden name Tournier, was the prettiest girl all around Tronsay ten years ago. Hard work in the fields and maternal cares have left their mark upon her, but she is still pretty for a woman of 30, as you can see.

"At the time the adventure happened which earned for her the nickname of Wolf-Solange she was still single. Her parents were tenants of the small farm of Rein du Beis, about eight or nine miles from here, near Lurcey Levy. Although poor, she had no lack of suitors, even among the rich class of young men of the neighborhood; but the only one she encouraged was a certain Laurent Grillet, to whom she had taken a fancy when she was a mere girl and they used to tend sheep together.

"Laurent Grillet was a fondling; his fortune consisted of his strong right arm only. Solange's parents, not seeing the advisability of marrying their daughter to a man just as poor as they were, especially when she had several much better chances, forbade Solange to meet her lover; but the parents' injunction was unheeded, and as they lived in the same village and the forest was close by, the opportunities of meeting were numerous and easy. When the Tourniers discovered that the lovers still saw each other, and perceived that neither soft words nor blows had any effect on Solange, they came to a weighty decision: they would send her out to service at Ursay, on the model farm of M. Roger Dallos, our Deputy.

"Perhaps you think this put a stop to the lovers' meeting? If so, you are quite mistaken. The only difference was they had to see each other at night. As soon as it was quite dark the young people slipped away from their respective farms on which they worked, and, taking a short cut to save time and to avoid the high road, met in the forest unknown to any one.

"It was in 1879. The summer and autumn passed in this way, then came the winter—and a terrible winter it was! The Cher was full of pieces of floating ice, and finally it froze right over; the high trees of Tronsay bent under the weight of the snow; the forest was deserted, the roads having become almost impassible; and we saw what we hadn't seen for many a year—wolves!

"Yes, young gentlemen, wolves. They prowled about the outlying farms of Lurcey-Levy and Ursay, alarming the good people who lived on those farms, and were even seen in the streets of Saint Bonnet le Desert, an out of the way place close to the forest. Wolf hunts were organized to kill them and 50 francs were paid for a wolf's head. I myself saw three—two full grown ones and a young one—on the opposite bank of the Cher one morning when I was on my way to Saint Amand in my cart.

"But neither the hard winter nor the wolves prevented Laurent and Solange from meeting at night in the forest; in spite of all dangers they continued their nightly expeditions. Every evening Laurent left Lurcey-Levy, his gun under his arm, and walked through the snow covered forest with a blithe, fearless step; Solange on her side slipped away from Ursay at 9 o'clock; and they met at a glade called 'The Walk,' about a mile and a half from here.

"On Christmas evening they met as usual, but just as Laurent reached the glade he slipped upon the frozen ground, and fell in such an awkward way as to break his right leg and strain his right wrist. Solange tried to lift him up but was unable to do so; she could only drag him to a young elm tree and set him up with his back against the trunk.

"'Stop there, my poor Laurent,' she said, wrapping her cloak around him, 'and I will run to the doctor at Ursay; he will come and fetch you in his cart.'

"She started off on her way to the village, and had turned the bend in the road, when she heard the report of a gun and a cry for help. She ran back to her lover, whom she found ghastly pale with pain and fear, one hand convulsively clutching his gun, which was lying on the ground.

"'What is the matter, Laurent, dear?' she asked, anxiously. 'Was it you who fired?'

"'Yes,' he replied. 'Soon after you had left me I noticed a strong smell, and when I looked up I saw an animal with glaring red eyes, and as big as a great dog. I believe it was a wolf.'

"'Did you fire at it?'

"'No; I couldn't lift the gun, you know, on account of my arm. I pulled the trigger as it rested on the ground to frighten the brute, and you see he is gone.'

"'Will it come back?' asked Solange after a moment's reflection.

"'I am sure it will!' answered the young man. 'You'll have to stop here with me, Solange; if you don't the beast will eat me.'

"'Very well, dear,' said Solange, 'I'll stop with you. Let me have your gun.'

"She took up the weapon, shook out the discharged cartridge and put in a fresh one; and they both waited anxiously.

"Two hours, perhaps more, passed. The moon, still invisible, had risen above the horizon, for the sky reflected a confused light, which became brighter each minute. Laurent was feverish—he shivered and groaned; Solange, benumbed with cold, standing up with her back against the tree, began to get drowsy.

"All at once a kind of whine or howl, like that of a dog chained up at night, made her jump. In the semi-darkness she saw two fiery eyes; it was the wolf.

"Laurent tried to get up and take the gun, but the pain was too great, and he fell back again into a sitting position with a groan.

"'Make ready, Solange,' he cried; 'aim straight between the eyes, and don't fire too soon.'

'Solange raised the weapon to her shoulder, took aim and fired; but the kick of the gun made her miss the animal. Nevertheless, scared by the report, it fled along the road, and was quickly out of sight. A little while afterward they heard it howling in the distance, and it was answered by others.

The moon now emerged from behind the trees and lighted up the whole of the forest, and a terrifying sight met the eyes of the lovers. Within gunshot were five wolves, seated on their hindquarters, like dogs, across the path, while another, bolder than its fellows, was slowly making its way toward Laurent and Solange.

"'Listen to what I tell you, Solange,' said Laurent. 'Take aim at the one which is coming toward us; if you can manage to knock him over, the others will eat him, and we shall have a rest while they are doing it.'

"The wolf continued to advance slowly; they could see its red eyeballs, its bones showing through its dull, ragged-looking coat—so thin was it through hunger—and its open mouth with the tongue hanging out.

"'Rest the butt of the gun well in the hollow of your shoulder,' said Laurent. 'Now let him have it!'

"Bang! The wolf gave a jump in the air and fell dead without a sound; the others rushed away as hard as they could and disappeared in the brushwood.

"'Run to the wolf, quick, Solange!' exclaimed her lover. 'Drag it as far up the road as you can; there is no danger, the others won't come back yet.'

"She ran to the dead wolf, but he called her back when she had gone a few steps.

"'We ought to cut off the head, you know, so as to get the reward.'

"'Have you got a knife?' she asked.

"'Yes, here in my belt.'

"It was a hunting knife, with a short handle and a wide blade. She took it and running to where the animal lay, she cut off its head and dragged the carcass by one foot over the slippery ground as far away as she could, and returned to Laurent with the head.

"What Laurent had foreseen took place. The wolves, frightened at first by the death of their companion, came back—all five of them—when they smelt blood. By the light of the moon the two young people saw the group of wolves struggling, fighting, and rolling over one another in their efforts to get a full share of the prey, of which they devoured every scrap.

"Laurent began to suffer terribly from his broken leg. Solange, whose nerves were giving way under the strain, was vainly endeavoring to struggle against fatigue and drowsiness. Twice the gun nearly fell from her hands.

"Having finished their meal, the wolves began to come nearer to the young people. The girl fired once, twice, at random in their midst, but her frozen fingers trembled and the bullets were wide of the mark. At the report of the gun the brutes scurried away along the road for some short distance, where they stopped for a few minutes and then came back.

"Laurent and Solange knew that it was all over with them, then, and that they must perish.

"The girl let the gun fall to the ground, but not for an instant did she think of abandoning her wounded lover and saving herself by flight. She lay down upon the frozen ground by his side and threw one end of her cloak, which she had wrapped him in, over her own benumbed limbs, and putting her arms round him, she laid her head against his cheek; thus, outwardly frozen by the cold and inwardly burning with fever, they both waited for death.

"Strange fancies took possession of their disordered minds as they lay half unconscious; it was once again summer time and they were wandering through the forest decked with summer verdure, enjoying the lovely June evening; then the trees and hedges became suddenly bare, and the forest covered with snow, upon which stood out clearly a mass of moving forms with blazing eyes and gaping mouths—a mass which grew larger every minute, and drew nearer to them to devour them.

"But, fortunately, neither Laurent nor Solange were destined to die in that awful manner. Providence—I believe in Providence, my boys—ordained on that very morning I was returning through the forest in my cart from Saint-Bonnet-le-Desert, where I had been to attend a very urgent case.

"I was driving, while my servant, holding a loaded gun ready in his hand, was on the lookout for wolves. No doubt the bells on my horse frightened the brutes, for we did not see a single one. When we reached the tree, at the foot of which the lovers were lying, my horse shied, and so drew my attention to them. I jumped out, and, aided by my man, lifted the poor things, unconscious and stiff with cold, into the cart, covered them with everything we had in the way of rugs, and made my way as quickly as possible to Ursay.

"I did not forget to take the wolf's head with me.

"It was about 7 o'clock, and the day was breaking when we reached the village. We were met by a large party, consisting of the men employed on the farm of M. Roger Duflos, and about half the people of the village, who, uneasy at the disappearance of Solange, were going in search of her. And it was in that large kitchen where you have just dined that Laurent and Solange, restored to consciousness and seated in front of a flaming beech wood fire, told us what they had passed through during that dreadful night."

"Well, doctor, I suppose they got married after that?" we asked.

"Of course," replied the Doctor. "The will of Providence is sometimes so clearly shown in the course of events that it does not require any gift of second sight to perceive it. After the adventure of the wolves the parents of Solange consented to her marriage with Laurent Grillet. The wedding took place in the spring, and the fifty francs reward which they received for the wolf's head paid for the bride's dress."

We all remained silent. It was now quite dark, the twinkling stars were reflected in the deep, blue water of the Cher, and the thick mass of trees stood out like mountains upon the horizon.

We saw Wolf Solange dress her two boys and come toward us on her way back to her home, the child asleep in her arms and the others walking by her side as before. As she passed us she smiled at the Doctor, who smiled in return and wished her a cheery "Good evening, Solange!"—From the French, in the Strand Magazine.

Portugal Proposes to Acquire a Navy.

Portugal proposes to acquire a modern navy in a novel manner. First-class shipbuilders are to be asked how many vessels of specified types they will supply a year, for twenty years or less, in consideration of $555,000 a year and certain monopolies. The award will go to the firm that offers the most in the least time and for the shortest period of monopoly. The Government shipyards will be closed and one yard established at Lisbon, to which all the existing machinery and operatives will be sent.

PLAINFIELD, N. J., JAN. 9, 1895.

FOR PLAINFIELD'S PROGRESS.

First Shots at the Old Flag.

The stars and stripes were first assailed by the Confederates on Jan. 9, 1861. Soon after dawn of that day the United States steamer Star of the West, carrying 200 armed soldiers of the Ninth infantry, intended to re-enforce the garrison of Fort Sumter, crossed the bar of Charleston harbor and steamed up the channel. When within little less than two miles of the fort, a masked battery on Morris island, half a mile distant from the vessel, opened fire. The steamer carried the usual American ensign on her staff, and at the first shot ran up a full sized garrison flag at her fore, but that was no more respected than the other.

The captain of the Star of the West had intentionally selected his course near the Morris island shore in order to keep out of range of the Confederate guns in Fort Moultrie, and therefore sailed some distance under fire. Most of the balls passed over, several, however, barely missing the mark. Fort Sumter's guns did not answer the Morris island battery, and Fort Moultrie remained silent. Meanwhile several small vessels and armed schooners bore down on the Star of the West, with the apparent purpose of cutting her off, and the commander of the expedition, Lieutenant Charles R. Woods, U. S. A. (afterward a distinguished general), decided to put about and abandon the project. The battery kept up a brisk fire until the vessel had passed out of range.

GEORGE L. KILMER.

Those who have always thought of Gov. Werts as a matter-of-fact, utilitarian person are agreeably surprised at the sentiment he displays in his message to the Legislature. He makes a stirring and poetic plea for the protection of the Palisades, and effects a striking combination of sentiment and sense. Gov. Werts has constantly shown himself a man of head, and now he stands revealed as a man of head and heart, worthy of the sincere affection and deep respect of the great little State which he is governing with such judgment and vigor.

Charles C. McBride is an editor who has won honor and reward in the newspaper world by his enterprising, fearless and powerful conduct of the Elizabeth Journal. He has made politicians, and now he is reaping political reward. Yesterday Senator Stokes appointed him private secretary, a position where the editor with the curly gray locks will have an opportunity to develop a masterly silence on what he knows about the inner workings of the Republican party in New Jersey. As private secretary, Mr. McBride will get on to lots of news that as a newspaper man he 'd itch to publish—but can 't. Still, it 's a pleasant honor, and shows that his integrity and faithful service are appreciated, and The Press extends its sincere congratulations.

Plainfield is particularly fortunate in having a postoffice in which the wants of the town have been supplied almost as soon as they have been felt. Especially in the free delivery and collection of the mails has the progress been marked by unusual strides of late. There is one fault, however, in this particular department of the postoffice, that might be obviated by the expenditure of a very few dollars and a very little trouble. In all United States mail boxes will be found a recessed frame, designed to hold a list of times for collection from the particular box In large cities the list gives times of collection and also times of arrival at the sub-station. In the Plainfield boxes these frames are empty, and the person who drops a letter in the slot has but a very vague idea, if any at all, as to when the mail will be collected. From some boxes there are two collections in twenty-four hours, from others four, but one has no means of finding out the number for a particular box without inquiring at the postoffice While it is true that in a place where the carriers routes are so long the time of collection from any particular box will vary slightly, still it is possible to announce by means of a simple card the number of collections and their approximate times, to the great convenience of anyone using the box. At a purely nominal cost this little convenience might be provided, and there are many who would thank the postmaster heartily if they could tell with any degree of certainty when a letter consigned by them to the letter-box would start on its journey.

—The union services of the Plainfield and Grace Methodist churches will be continued tonight and each night this week except Saturday. Rev. Mr. Randolph of Grace Church will speak tonight. The service will be in Vincent Chapel.

—Wm. R. Conover, proprietor of the pool room at 25 Somerset street, will remodel and refurnish the billiard parlors over Woolston & Buckle's on North avenue which he has recently leased, and intends making it a popular resort for lovers of the game.

DRAMA AND OPERA.

"THE SCARLET LETTER" BY DAMROSCH, PROMISES WELL.

Denman Thompson Revives "The Old Homestead for a Long Run. The Kendals Fail to Enthuse New York Audiences. "Down in Dixie" Scores a Hit.

"Lady Clancarty" was played, I believe, for two hundred and fifty consecutive nights in London. Even with the magnificent setting given to it by the Kendals it is difficult to find much reason for such long continued popularity. The scenery at Abbey's in New York was certainly a triumph of decorative art. Few more charming pictures have been shown us on the stage than that presented in the third act, in Lady Clancarthy's chamber; there was such an air of solidity about the room, with its tapestried walls and rich furniture, all in unimpeachable taste and historically correct. Even the hearse like plumes on the bed were not forgotten. There was, in fact, everything in the revival at Abbey's—scenery, costumes and stage furniture—everything, save a good piece. Mrs. Kendal struggled hard to enlist the sympathies of the audience for that poor young wife. But you felt that it was simply technique and not art that interested you. It was the actress, not the play. Tom Taylor's reach wofully exceeded his grasp in this instance, and instead of writing, as, I dare say, he believed he had done, a strong historical play, he simply turned out a mild melodrama. The Kendals are not as popular in New York as they were upon their first visit to this country several years ago.

The good "Old Homestead" is revived at the Star, and promises a long run. There is nightly what Joshua Whitcomb would style "a right smart shower," and this imitation of a rain storm in "The Old Homestead" is made close by several novel devices, one of which, at least, is quite new. It occurs at the end of the first act. During the long scene between the tramp and Uncle Josh the lights are gradually lowered, so that the transition from day to darkness occupies fully fifteen minutes. Having dismissed the ragged wanderer, the old farmer falls a-dozing in his chair, and does not see the bright flashes of "heat" lightning that illuminate the sky, nor the black clouds that they reveal, and that are gathering threateningly. A clap of thunder alarms "the wimmin folks." They rush outdoors to rouse the head of the house, and a great scurrying about ensues to make everything secure for the shower. Meanwhile the lightning grows brighter, the intervals of darkness blacker, and the thunder louder and more nearly continuous. Finally, responsive to a "near by" thunder peal, zigzag streaks of blinding lightning run across the sky, light up the landscape, and are reflected for a moment in the lake in the background, and the rain begins. Its coming is made known to the ear by a good imitation of the rushing sound made by the first heavy fall of big rain drops, and for the eye there is across half of the stage a transparent curtain striped with whitish gray drops which look much like rain falling slantingly. This is so arranged that the flashes of lightning that come from the rear of the stage are still plainly seen through the rainfall, the falling drops reflecting the light a little. In total darkness they are still faintly visible.

A drama that is having its first run in New York is "Down in Dixie" at the Columbus. The author is Scott Marble, an actor, who seems to have been a shrewd observer of audiences, and into this play he has crowded a good deal of stuff that delights the multitude at the theatres. To enliven his scenes of Southern life he employs a number of real and imitation negroes, who sing and dance, many of them in the manner of the pickaninny bands in "The Passing Show" and "In Old Kentucky." For a big, deep thrill lie resorts to the old, old device of placing the hero of his story where he seems sure to be horribly mangled to death and then saving him at the last possible moment. It is hard to explain why the spectators of such mimic dangers, knowing full well that the hero bears a charmed life, and can't be killed by all the villains who choose to pursue him, will nevertheless get excited over his predicament. But it has been so from the railway locomotive in "Under the Gaslight" to the bomb in "The Fatal Card." The machine set up for the same purpose in "Down in Dixie" is a cotton compress. The scene shows the machinery of the compress, the details being remarkable for their minuteness. The hissing of the steam, which escapes from the three cylinders in clouds, is heard, and suddenly the three pistons move. The huge platen descends with a majesty and certainty that is intended to curdle the blood and cause the hairs of the audience to stand on end.

The principal feature of the Symphony Society concerts on Friday afternoon and Saturday evening were a number of extracts from Mr. Walter Damrosch's opera, "The Scarlet Letter." This work, upon which the composer has been occupied for some time, is founded upon Hawthorne's novel, and the libretto is from the pen of Mr. George Parsons Lathrop. LINWARD.

REMOVAL.

Dr. Lighthill begs leave to give notice that he has removed to

NO. 132 CRESCENT AVE.

(a few doors from his former location) where he can be consulted on all chronic diseases of whatever name and nature.

Dr. Lighthill refers with pardonable pride to the success of his practice in Plainfield and submits below a few of the many testimonials which he has received from grateful patients. A mass of similar ones can be seen at his office.

AN ALMOST MIRACULOUS CURE.

The Statement of Mr. Edward Teel, Jr., of Dunellen, N. J.

TO THE PUBLIC:

From a sense of duty I desire to call public attention to the almost miraculous cure which Dr. Lighthill effected in the case of my wife. For eleven years she had been afflicted with piles of an unusual severe and distressing character. She suffered every day of her life the most intense pain, attended with frequent and profuse hemorrhage. This state of things debilitated her entire system until she became a perfect wreck of her former self.

We made every effort to obtain a cure but they all resulted in bitter disappointment, although a number of physicians of excellent reputations for skill in that direction had treated her case. She grew worse and worse all the time, the pain became perfectly unbearable and I felt she could not bear the strain of her condition much longer. In this extremity, a friend of mine, Mr. W. E. Dilts, a resident of Roselle, N. J., a passenger conductor on the New Jersey Central told me that he had been similarly affected, and had been permanently cured by Dr. Lighthill, after other medical skill had failed. He assured me that the doctor would cure my wife, no matter how severe her case may be, and his prediction proved perfectly correct. In spite of her desperate condition, Dr. Lighthill, I am glad to say, has effected a complete and perfect cure in her case, and has given her new life.

Since the cure has been effected she has gained in health and strength and is so improved in appearance that her friends scarcely recognize her. They all consider her cure as almost miraculous, and Dr. Lighthill's praise is heard on every side Our gratitude to Dr. Lighthill is unbounded and we only hope that other sufferers may be benefited by this publication.

EDWARD TEEL, JR.

A Flattering Testimonial from Colonel John Dietrich, One of Plainfield's Oldest and Best Known Residents.

16 ARLINGTON PLACE,
Plainfield, N. J., July 17, 1894

I am profoundly grateful to Dr. Lighthill for his speedy and radical cure of a most painful malady of over ten years standing with which I was afflicted.

I deem it proper to say to all afflicted to place themselves under the care of this skilful physician and be permanently cured.

I will cheerfully impart any information I possess when called upon.

JOHN DIETRICH.

Mr. Thomas Callahan of No. 214 Richmond street Cured of a Very Distressing Trouble by Dr. Lighthill.

PLAINFIELD, N. J., June 1, 1894.

TO THE PUBLIC:

For some time past I have been greatly distressed with noises in the head. They were all over my head and troubled me constantly; they were loudest at night when everything was quiet and at such times would often keep me from sleep and disturb my rest. In fact they got to be so bad and distressing that they affected my whole nervous system as well as my health. I did not obtain the least relief until I placed myself under the care of Dr. Lighthill, of No. 132 Crescent avenue, who effected a complete cure in my case in a short time and made me a very happy man.

THOMAS CALLAHAN,
214 Richmond street.

A Card From Mr. T. R VanZandt,

of Nos. 304 and 306 Park ave.,

Plainfield, N. J

I certify with pleasure that Dr. Lighthill has effectually cured me of a most painful case of piles. For some time past I had been subject to its attacks, but the last attack was so exceedingly painful that it completely upset my whole system. The pain extended to my legs and in many other directions, and made me so nervous that I could neither sleep, sit down, lie down or move about without serious discomfort and distress. Such was my condition when I applied to Dr. Lighthill for relief, and I am glad to say that as soon as he took hold of my case, I began to improve, and in a short time found myself completely cured. Dr. Lighthill has also effected a radical and permanent cure in a most terrible case of piles on my cousin, Mr. J. V. Z Griggs, of Rocky Hill, N. J., whose flattering testimonial is in Dr. Lighthill's possession.

NEWS OF NEAR NEIGHBORS.

Scotch Plains and Fanwood.

Fanwood Council R. A., held their public installation and reception last evening and notwithstanding the inclement weather the hall was nicely filled with the elite of Scotch Plains and Fanwood society. Council met in their rooms over the hall and marched in a body to the strains of Lambert's orchestra downstairs, where seats were reserved in the front of the hall. The hall was decorated with a ship's full colors. After an overture by the orchestra Regent Bowman made a short address of welcome and turned the evening entertainment over to the orator. Hugh J. Emmet entertained the audience with several selections on the violin, after which District Deputy Black proceeded to install the officers elect for the ensuing year. The ceremony of installation was very impressive and entertaining, Deputy Black showing he was well up in his work. After installation Mr. Emmet entertained the audience with imitations of a country dance, on the violin. Deputy Black made an address on the merits and benefits of the order and appealed to the ladies for their support, telling them they could get brother, husband, etc., into an order like the R. A. quicker than men could, and that it was to their interest to do so as they would receive the benefit when the strong right arm ceased to protect them. W. E. Collins, the newly-installed Regent, made a short address and brought the entertainment to a close. The floor was soon cleared. The grand march was led by Regent Collins and Mrs. W. B. Buckley, after which the evening was given over to the tripping of the light fantastic toe. Among those present were: Mr and Mrs George Kyte, Mr and Mrs H Robison, Mr and Mrs Runand, Mr and Mrs Gwynnett, Mr and Mrs H O Robison, L Tuzo, H Kyte, H Young, Miss Briggs, Miss Florence Kyte, Miss Kyte, and others of Fanwood, Mr and Mrs L W Miller, Mr and Mrs John Robison, Mr and Mrs W B Buckley, Mr and Mrs George W Marsh, Mr and Mrs Hand, Mr and Mrs T J Eicholl, Mr and Mrs William Maguin, Mr and Mrs John Johnston, Mr and Mrs W E Collins, the Misses Colton, Squires, Parse, Bliss, Adams, Randolph, Quereau, Robison, Frentz, Nichols, Carter, Hennedy, Hosinger, Marsh, Messrs. Cortens, Noble, Collins, Cull, Fields, Patterson, Marsh, and others of Scoth Plains. The evening was brought to a close about 2 in the morning and all left with best wishes for the Royal Arcanum and its members. The officers installed for the ensuing year were: Regent—W E Collins; Vice Regent—Frank Quereau; Orator—W B Buckley; Treasurer—Dr F W Westcott; Collector—J H Parks; Past Regent—John Bowman; Guide—George Collins, Warden—John G Cook; Sentry—Irving Quereau. Secretary Dunn was unable to be present to be installed on account of sickness.

The election for Fire Department officers was held at the several companies headquarters last evening and resulted as follows: Chief—F W Westcott; First Assistant—F W Quereau; Second Assistant—W H Lake.

Norman Dunn is confined to his home on Mountain Avenue with a severe cold.

An election for Sunday-school officers for the ensuing year will be held at the Baptist Sunday-school Sunday.

Thursday and Friday evening the Baptist and Methodist churches will unite in holding union prayer meetings at the Methodist church.

Thomas S. Young offers $100 towards crushed stone to be used on Forest avenue if the Township will open Russell road and run the branch of the trolley over it instead of Forest avenue.

A large sleighload of the young people of the town enjoyed a straw ride Saturday evening, Milburn being their destination. After dancing (winning a horse for 10 cents), and partaking of refreshments, the journey home began, arriving about 12 o'clock.

A reception will be tendered the pastor's choir of the Baptist Church Saturday afternoon from 3 to 5. Chocolate and cake will be served.

Miss Mary Hayes is confined to her bed by a severe cold.

Wm. Corey of Albany is spending a few days with George W. Randolph of Park avenue.

—At the regular meeting of Anchor Lodge, No. 149, F. and A. M., last evening, the F. C. degree was conferred on one candidate. The balance of the evening was occupied with routine business.

There is good reason for the popularity of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. Davis & Buzard, of West Monterey, Clarion Co., Pa., say: "It has cured people that our physicians could do nothing for; we persuaded them to try a bottle of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy and now they recommend it with the rest of us." 25 and 50c bottles for sale at Reynolds's Pharmacy, Park and North avenues. The Elliot Will Case.

In the Elliot will case before Judge Rice in New Brunswick yesterday, Geo. W. DeMeza filed a caveat in favor of William and Walter Elliot on the grounds of undue influence and want of testamentary capacity. Lawyer DeMeza made an application to have the matter referred to Judge VanCleef, and further applied for the appointment of an administrator prudente lite. Messrs. Foley and Powell of New York sustained the will.

Mrs. Elliot's property consists of a large hotel in Lakewood, valuable real estate in Dunellen and a large life insurance policy.

Marvelous Results.

From a letter written by Rev. J. Gunderman, of Dismondale, Mich., we are permitted to make this extract: 'I have no hesitation in recommending Dr. King's New Discovery, as the results were almost marvelous in the case of my wife. While I was pastor of the Baptist Church at Rives Junction she was brought down by pneumonia succeeding la grippe. Terrible paroxysms of coughing would last hours with little interruption and it seemed as if she could not survive them. A friend recommended Dr. King's New Discovery; it was quick in its work and highly satisfactory in results. Sold by L. W. Randolph druggist. Regular size 50c and $1; our price 45c and 90c

A HAPPY FELLOW.

From the meadow where I sit,
See a sky o' blue—
God was six days paintin' it
Jest fer me an' you.

Every time it strikes my eye
I keep sayin': "There's your sky!
Blue an' bendin'
An' unendin'!"
So I sing, an' never sigh.

Sunshine over hill an' glen—
Birds in every tree;
When God made the country, ten
Acres came to me!

Every time it blossoms fair,
I keep sayin': "That's your share!
Roses growin'—
Rivers flowin'!"
So I'm happy everywhere!

Spring or winter—rain or shine,
Don't care where I'm at,
So much of the country's mine—
Praise the Lord for that!

Sky an' meadow, high or low,
I keep sayin' as I go—
"There's your birthright!"
Got the earth right—
That is why I'm singing so.

DR. WILDER'S BRAINLESS FROG.

Put Through Its Tricks Before the Association of American Anatomists.

A brainless frog was one of the features of interest on the second and last day's session of the Association of American Anatomists. It was exhibited by Dr. Burt G. Wilder of Cornell University, and it was brought upon the scene after Dr. Wilder had read his paper on "Some Anomalies of the Brain."

It was a good-sized, lusty-looking batrachian, and it was in a bottle. Dr. Wilder handled the bottle gingerly while he explained that he had removed the frog's brain on Dec. 7, the frog being under the influence of ether. He then rolled the frog out on the table. All the men of science gathered around and examined the frog's left ear, where the brain had been removed.

The frog, meanwhile, had got into a squat, and gazed stupidly straight before him. He was motionless, and when Dr. Wilder passed his hand quickly before his bulbous eyes the frog didn't even blink.

"That shows," said Dr. Wilder with a little pride, "that froggie hasn't enough brains left to realize the impression given to the eye."

When the doctor touched the frog's back, however, he wriggled and made a movement as if he'd like to get away, only he hadn't enough energy to do so. Then Dr. Wilder brought out a wicker cylinder, and when the frog was placed on top of it he knew enough to keep from sliding off, or to keep it from slipping from under him.

The frog, having shown himself off in this trick, was put in a glass basin half full of water. Instantly he struck out with all fours, and swam as if his head were full of brains.

"That," said Dr. Wilder, "is just like a frog that has a mind."

Then a bit of meat was got, and forced down the frog's throat with the aid of a forceps. For a moment the meat rested there, the frog not knowing enough to swallow. But presently it must have choked him, for he gave a great gulp and bolted it.

"That," said Dr. Wilder triumphantly, "is reflex action."

The end of the frog's accomplishments having been reached, he was put back in his bottle. It is said that he may live for seven or eight months without a brain.

GOLD MINES IN CEMETERIES.

Half a Million in Gold Buried Annually with Americans.

A Frenchman who recently made a tour of the United States has been writing his impressions in Le Temps. In one of his articles he says that what struck him particularly in this country was the Ameriban habit of filling the teeth with gold.

He consulted statisticians, he says, and by figuring on information given by them has discovered that the gold annually pounded into cavities in the teeth of Americans amounts to the value of $500,000.

All of this precious metal, he says, is buried with the Yankees when they die, and he figures that at the end of three centuries the cemeteries of America will contain gold to the value of £30,000,000.

"I am afraid," the writer goes on to say, "that this will prove too tempting to the practical mind of the future American, and we shall see the day when companies will be organized to mine the cemeteries and recover the gold secreted in the jaws of dead ancestors."

"I know an old soldier who had chronic diarrhoea of long standing to have been permanently cured by taking Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy,' says Edward Shumpik, a prominent druggist of Minneapolis, Minn. I have sold the remedy in this city for over 7 years and consider it superior to any other medicine now on the market for bowel complaints. 25 and 50c bottles of this remedy for sale at Reynolds's Pharmacy. Chapped Hands and Lemon Juice and Glycerine.
Rough, painful, perhaps bleeding hands are bad enough, but what annoys you most is the untidy looks which scrubbing seems only to make worse and which nothing but warm weather will quite remedy. Yet lots of people find relief in a simple mixture prepared by us from lemon juice and glycerine—names which suggest comfort and cure. Glycerine is everywhere used, but people forget the cleansing and whitening properties of lemon juice and its power of neutralizing the bad effect of strong soaps. REYNOLDS'S LEMON JUICE AND GLYCERINE once used is never forgotten. Sprinkler bottles 25c. REYNOLDS'S PHARMACY, Park and North avenues.

RIOTING IN ST. JOHN'S

Destitute Citizens Raid the Legislative Building.

After a Desperate Encounter with the Police They Are Ejected from the Hall—They Then Loot the Stores To Secure Food—Four of the Leaders Arrested.

St. John's, N. F., Jan. 9.—Disorder prevailed here all day, and it is nothing short of a miracle that serious bloodshed was averted. The unemployed assembled early in the morning and marched to the man-of-war Tourmaline, whose captain had promised them that he would use his influence with the authorities in obtaining relief from the destitution now prevailing. His ministrations were fruitless. It seems, for when the crowd of unfortunates appeared, he referred them to the governor. Disappointed, and exasperated with hunger, the men reformed their ranks and marched to the government house, where a deputation waited upon the executive. The latter informed them that the government was considering measures of relief, and advised them, pending action on the bills, to call upon the city representatives for their immediate wants.

The mob, for such it had now become, then went to the legislative buildings, but were refused admission. Enraged at this, they burst open the doos and surged into the corridors. The police on guard attempted to drive them out, but they were overwhelmed by the infuriated mob and forced to retire, leaving the building at the mercy of the invaders. The assembly not being in session, few members were in the building at the time, but those who were, lost no time in fleeing from the place. The police reserves were summoned, and, after a desperate struggle, managed to eject the intruders.

In the afternoon the crowd reassembled and returned to the government house, where it complained to the governor of its treatment during the morning and reiterated its demand for relief. The governor repeated his advice of the forenoon and said he was powerless to act without the cooperation of the ministry.

Then the crowd once more made its way to the legislative buildings. The hour for the convening of the session was near at hand, and, knowing the determination of the mob, those inside, on being informed of its approach, immediately began preparations to prevent its entry. The doors were barricaded and the whole available police force were stationed around the building. The crowd swelled in dimensions momentarily, and soon the whole of the grounds in front of the structure was a solid mass of humanity, in the midst of which floated a large flag bearing conspicuously the words, "Work or Bread," while ejaculations of similar import were made by the crowd. By this time, the mob, seeing that no attention was being paid to its demands by those inside the building, made a rush for the doors. The police were powerless to stem the tide of the infuriated mass and many officers were injured.

One sergeant was thrown over the steps leading to the main door and seriously hurt, while another officer had his cheek cut open with a stone. Finally, Premier Greene appeared on the balcony, and, in a speech, expressed regret at the condition of the colony and the destitution prevailing among the people. He promised that employment would be given within three days and begged the crowd to have patience and confidence in the government. He promised to resign, if work was not provided within the time specified.

This did not satisfy the crowd, who told him plainly that they would break into the stores and get food. This threat the mob immediately put into effect. Marching down into the city, the rioters made an attack upon stores and received a quantity of provisions. Just as they were being carried out a large force of police appeared on the scene, and drove the mob away after a severe struggle, during which the police were forced to draw their swords in self defense. A body of mounted police arrived shortly afterward, and the combined forces managed to keep the crowd at bay until darkness came, when the rioters dispersed. Four of the leaders have been arrested.

The streets this morning are crowded with people. A guard from the warship Tourmaline is doing patrol duty in front of the principal buildings, as it is feared that other raids may be attempted during the day.

The Addicks Divorce Case.

Wilmington, Del., Jan. 9.—Chief Justice Lore has denied the petition of J. Edward Addicks to compel his wife to file a specific bill of particulars in her divorce suit. The court fixed Mrs. Addicks alimony at $100 a month during pendency of the suit, payment to begin thirty days from this date. It also allowed her $1,500 for expenses.

Death of an Old Grain Merchant.

Utica, N. Y., Jan. 9.—D. D. Winston, one of Utica's oldest merchants is dead, aged 67 years. As a grain merchant and forwarder, he was well known throughout the state. He was at one time a manager of the Utica State hospital for the insane.

AN APPEAL FOR AID.

Destitute Ohio Miners Present a Petition to Gov. McKinley.

Columbus, O., Jan. 9.—I. N. Coleman and J. G. Riley, having proper credentials and representing the miners of sub-district No. 1, composed of the counties of Perry, Athens, Hocking and Muskingum, called upon Gov. McKinley and presented a petition picturing the destitution among the 10,000 miners there, 5,000 of whom have not had any work for months, and asking the governor to appeal to the people of the state for aid. The committee was given a respectful hearing by the governor, who exhibited considerable emotion over the sufferings portrayed.

The governor asked them how much they thought they would need, but the committee of course could make no estimate. The result of the conference was that a call will be issued to the people asking for contributions and a committee of respectable citizens in different parts of the state will be designated to receive and disburse the moneys, clothing etc., received.

There are fifty thousand destitute people in the district who are without food or fuel. The wages paid at the best mines do not average $1 a day and the work is so divided that no man makes more than $3 a week. This is done so that all can earn a little each week to keep the wolf from the door. The papers will also appeal to the people.

PETITION TO GOV. MORTON.

Dutchess Lawyers Want Judge Barnard to Hold Special Terms.

Albany, Jan. 9.—A petition has been prepared for the presentation to Gov. Morton signed by all the leading lawyers of Dutchess county asking the governor to assign ex-Justice Joseph F. Barnard of Poughkeepsie to the duty of holding special terms at Poughkeepsie on each Saturday and to sit at chambers the other days of the week.

The new constitution provides that any justice of the supreme court whose term of office is abridged by reason of the age limitation of 70 years, "may, with his consent be assigned by the governor from time to time to any duty in the supreme court while his compensation is so continued."

Justice Barnard's last term began on January 1, 1886. He was elected for a term of 14 years, and therefore is available for five years to come. He has expressed his consent to be assigned to any duty of holding court.

ON HIS WEDDING NIGHT.

A Young Man Calmly Sits Down and Kills Himself.

Cleveland, O., Jan., 9.—George W. Davis, aged 26 years, a claim agent of the Lake Shore railroad, committed suicide under peculiar circumstances. Early in the evening he went with his brother to their home, 131 Liberty street. He had not been dead an hour when two little girls came to the house, who inquired for him and explained that their sister, whom he was to marry. The young lady is Miss Anna Noona, an intelligent and handsome girl employed in one of the hospitals.

WHAT WILL ITS FATE BE

Speculation on the Carlisle Banking Bill.

Said by the Opponents That It Will Be Defeated by a Vote of 25 to 40—Mr. Sibley's Attack on the President Without Being Called To Order—Work in the Senate.

Washington, Jan. 9.—There is a good deal of quiet but earnest work on the part of the opponents of the Carlisle banking bill with a view to encompassing its defeat when an opportunity offers. This opportunity may be presented when the committee on rules reports an order fixing debate under the five minute rule until Friday, on which date a vote will be taken.

When this resolution is reported, it is the intention of the opposition to antagonize it and to move to strike out the enacting clause of the Carlisle bill. It is feared by the friends of the measure that this motion will carry and that the bill will thus be lost without further delay. It is asserted by those who have canvassed the situation thoroughly that the bill will be defeated by a majority ranging from 25 to 40.

A statement by one of its supporters is that the measure had not at the present time to exceed 113 active friends. On the other hand the opposition is credited with a vote of 168 with 73 members absent or non-committal. The lowest majority predicted against the bill by its friends is ten.

General debate on the bill according to common understanding, was concluded with the adjournment of the house yesterday and the last day was marked with a most sensational speech. Mr. Sibley, a democrat, of Pennsylvania, opened the session's debate with an attack upon the president which exceeded in the character of its description of the chief executive anything that has been heard on the floor.

He described the president as a combination of "brains, belly and brass," without being called to order. He said the mouths of members had been padlocked by promises of patronage, and when pressed by Mr. Outhwaite (dem., O.), to tell who put a padlock upon his lips, said:

"Let me tell the gentleman that I am not talking to men who believe in going to hell in a handcart instead of to heaven supported by truth. Let me tell him also that I am not addressing men who believe more in a bobtail flush than a contrite heart."

Mr. Bland (dem., Mo.) and Mr. Johnson (dem., O.) also spoke in opposition to the bill, as did Mr. Caffeen (dem., Wyo.) The only speech in its favor was made by Mr. Cox (dem., Tenn.), a member of the committee on banking and currency. He said that if Mr. Sibley knew of any member who had sold his vote for patronage or anything else it was his duty to expose and vote to expel him. Mr. Cox's was the last name on the list of the chairman who wanted to speak in favor of the bill, but there remain quite a number who have asked to be heard against it.

Mr. Belthoover (dem., Pa.) gave notice of an additional section; he should offer as an amendment to the bill, authorizing the secretary of the treasury to sell $500,000,000 of five 25 year 3 per cent. bonds with the proceeds of which to retire the greenbacks and treasury notes and fund the floating indebtedness of the government.

Before the debate on the currency bill was begun, a resolution reported from the committee on rules was agreed to directing the committee on appropriations to add to the sundry civil bill a paragraph transferring the control and jurisdiction of the Leavenworth prison from the war department to the department of justice.

The speech of Senator Palmer (dem., Ill.), in opposition to the Lodge resolution as to the withdrawal of American vessels of war from the Haiwaiian islands was the only matter of much interest in the senate. The Illinois senator has the faculty of expressing his ideas in terse and vigorous language, and his speech bristled with sharp and pointed sayings. Thus, after arguing that it was absurd for the senate to demand reasons for the president's action unless it had also the right to compel an answer, he declared that organized curiosity was often simply organized impertinence; and he asserted that the president was maintaining the most rigorous policy of non-intervention in the affairs of the Hawaiian islands. As to the existing government in those islands he said that it was infinite impudence to characterize it as a republic. It was an aristocracy based on wealth. Just as Senator Aldrich (rep., R. I.) had got the floor to criticise the president's recent utterances, the morning hour expired, and the resolution lost its place of precedence, and was again remitted to the calendar. The remainder of the day's session was devoted to the delivery of eulogies on the late Senator Colquitt of Georgia.

LEHIGH COAL — TELEPHONE No. 17 — THORPE & IRVINS — 301-311 WATCHUNG AVE. — LUMBER, MASON'S SUPPLIES, ETC.

A HOUSE TRADER'S SNAP.

Next Door Neighbors Change Houses and Pay Him for It.

A man named Coombs was recognized authority on horses, not only in a certain lumber region in Pennsylvania, where he carried on a brisk business in trading and selling horses, and fitting out the lumbermen with teams, but also in the adjacent county he gained a reputation for shrewdness and square dealing.

When the county fair was held in September he was on the spot, and in front of the little store which he made his headquarters there was always a line of horses hitched to the fence, which the owners had driven from different parts of the country to be sold or traded, according to the pleasure of Mr. Coombs. One day as Coombs was leaning against his doorpost discussing the merits of a promising two year old with the enthusiastic owner of the animal, a wagon entered the enclosure in front of the shop and stopped at the door.

A man covered with dust, with a red face and wilted appearance, jumped from the wagon and addressed Mr. Coombs.

"Well, I am glad to see you, Mr. Coombs. Business looks promising with you," looking around at the horses on the grounds. "Perhaps I am not dusty and hot, and perhaps I do not think a deal of you to come twenty miles in this weather to make a trade with you. Just look at that horse. He is a beauty, he is. There isn't another like him in the country, but the fact is he is too speedy for me. I want a horse that will go well with the other horse—something not too fast, something strong and at the same time steady."

Mr. Coombs showed much interest in the matter, and the farmer became more and more convinced that he had acted wisely in securing his services. While they were talking he saw Mr Coombs's eye rest in a dreamy way on a pair of horses that were hitched near the door.

The instant he saw the object of Coombs's attention he exclaimed:

"Gad, sir, I think we have struck the very horse I want—the off horse, that bay there. Look him over. If he is sound and kind he will do for me. I'll trade even."

"I don't know," answered Coombs doubtfully. "He is an especially fine animal."

"Well, I will throw in $10. I will just step over to the fair grounds and you can think it over."

Presently another man appeared, the owner of the "especially fine animal."

"Have you found what I want?" he asked. "I must be getting home again. I have twenty miles to travel over before dark."

"Take a look at this horse," said Coombs, pointing to the animal that the owner had called too speedy. "He's just what you want. Fast, lightly built and good match for your other horse."

The farmer looked at the horse, compared it with his own horse, and had it hitched up and driven round the enclosure, and finally exclaimed:

"First rate. Is it an even trade?"

"Throw in $10 and you can have him," answered Coombs.

"It's a bargain," said the farmer.

He gave Coombs $10, and, leaving his "especially fine" animal, he drove his old horse and its new mate down the street.

When he had travelled about a mile one of the horses cast a shoe, and he was obliged to stop at a blacksmith shop beside the road. While he was chatting with his old acquaintance, the blacksmith, and waiting for the shoeing to be completed, he saw a wagon stop at the door, and an agitated voice exclaimed:

"Neighbor, I want to know where you got that horse," pointing to the newly acquired animal.

The owner came out of the shop and answered with pride:

"He's a fine piece of horseflesh, ain't he? I made a trade with Coombs. I—"

But he stopped abruptly, for his eyes rested on the off horse in his neighbor's team, and he saw in it his lately discarded property.

The two men looked at each other.

"How much did you pay to boot?" asked the man in the wagon.

"Ten dollars," answered the other, "and you?"

"Ten dollars."

They were neighbors; they lived a quarter of a mile from each other, and they drove home slowly, side by side, thinking, no doubt, of the long twenty miles over the dusty road, of the $10 of each, and sometimes of Coombs.—New York Tribune.

Queer Habits of Animals.

When the common earthworm is cut in two, to the tail there grows a head and to the head there grows a tail, and two animals are formed. As the wound heals a small white button is formed, which afterward develops into rings and a perfect extremity.

The serpent moves by elevating the scales on its abdomen and using them to push the body forward. The windings are always horizontal. The artists who represent the sinuosities as vertical have never observed the animal in motion. It is impossible for it to move in that way.

Herbivorous animals do not eat all of nature's menu. The horse refuses the water hemlock that the goat eats with avidity, and, on the other hand, the goat refuses some plants that are eaten by the sheep. The tobacco plant is avoided by all save the goat, man, and the tobacco worm. Some botanist think that no plant is absolutely poisonous, but only relatively so, being harmful to only certain animals.

The jawbones of a whale are sometimes 20 feet in length, and the mouth, when wide open, is 12 by 18 feet. The throat, however, is so small as scarcely to admit a hen's egg. The whale gets his living by straining the animalculæ and small fish out of the water he takes into his capacious mouth. It must be slow work, but, then, he has plenty of time and nothing else to do, so he attends to his eating so regularly that he often accumulates a ton of oil in his bulky system.

The sea anemone resembles in shape a morning glory. Its mouth opens like the cup of that flower, and above it are seen a number of tentacles waving in the water. Its food consists of anything it can get, but generally it gets the minute insects that float in the sea. At any alarm it closes its cup and is then hardly distinguishable from the rock on which it is rooted. It has a set of sucker muscles that attach it so firmly to the rock that it will sometimes be torn in pieces rather than let go.

WASHINGTON NEWS.

PROPOSED MODIFICATION OF THE PRESENT BANKING SYSTEM.

Mr. Carlisle's Suggested Changes in the Manner of Securing Circulation. Some of Our Bankrupt Railroads That Received Government Aid.

Mr. Springer, the Chairman of the House Committee on Banking and Currency, said the modifications in the present banking system which will be accomplished by the passage of the Carlisle bill proposes a radical change in the manner of securing bank note circulation. The present law requires a deposit of United States bonds, and permits the issue of notes to the amount of 90 per cent. of the par value of the bonds. The rapid payment of the public debt, the limited number of such bonds now outstanding, and the further fact that many of them are held in trust capacities in this country and as permanent investments by persons residing abroad, have rendered this kind of security impracticable, and some other must be devised or the national bank circulation will soon be retired. The Carlisle bill proposes for security of the circulating notes of national banks, instead of United States bonds, a guarantee fund consisting of legal tender notes or currency cirtificates to the amount of thirty per centum of the circulation applied for; also a safety fund to be raised by a tax of one half of one per cent. per annum upon the circulating notes, until it reaches five per centum of the whole circulation, and as a further security, a first lien upon all the assets of the bank and the amount which may be realized by the double liability feature of the national banking law. It must be observed here that the guarantee fund of 30 per centum, the assets of the bank, and the personal liabilites of the stockholders can only go to the payment of the circulating notes of the bank which issues them, but the five per cent. guarantee fund, raised by a tax upon all the circulation of the country, is a common fund out of which the notes of any failed bank may be paid if the guarantee fund, the assets, and personal liabilities of the stockholders are not sufficient.

The settlement of the debt that the Union Pacific owes the government, on the basis of the payment of the original amount of indebtedness without interest will bring, should it be carried out, joy to the heart of many a New England dowager and to many poverty stricken holders of Union Pacific stock. Few people realize the amount of worthless railroad securities that have been dumped on confiding New England investors. I am told that somewhere about $800,000,000 of stock of the Union Pacific, Reading Northern Pacific and Atchinson and Santa Fe railroad stock are owned by New Englanders, who thought when they purchased them they were glit edged securities. Hundreds of New England families, who a few years ago were in affluent circumstances, are, at present, in poverty owing to the decrease in the value of the stock of these railroads.

The gloomy old brick mansion in Lafayette square in which James G. Blaine lived during many years of his official life, and where he died, is to be torn down and on its site is to be erected a theatre. The old house is associated with many memorable tragedies in Washington life. It was here that the murderous assault was made on Secretary Seward and his son on the night of President Lincoln's assassination and Philip Barton Key was shot by General Sickles just after leaving its door. Mr. Blaine's son and daughter also died here. All these memories have made the house undesirable as a residence, while for a playhouse scarcely a better site could be found in Washington. The lot is very extensive, and is on the line of the chief street railroad immediately across Pennsylvania avenue from the principal entrance to the White House grounds and adjoining the Department of Justice and facing the Treasury Department.

In an attempt to prevent the spread of smallpox, which has recently been epidemic in Washington, the Commissioner of Pensions has issued an order prohibiting Pension Office clerks from practising medicine. The explanation of this order is that a large number of men employed in the Pension Office hold diplomas as physicians, and have private offices where they attend to patients outside of office hours. This class of physicans are called "sundown" doctors, and for a great many years the medical profession outside of those who hold Government jobs have been antagonistic to them. Year after year attempts have been made to have the "sundown" doctors either give up their Government salaries or their private practice, but until now no argument could be found weighty enough to be sustained by the officials in authority. Investigation since the smallpox epidemic has demonstrated to the satisfaction of the Commissioner of Pensions, however, that contagion has been carried by the "sundown" doctors from their patients to their fellow clerks in the departments, and the long sought for order has been issued.

Sparrows That Like Travel.

"There," said Clerk Sargent the other day, as a sparrow, that had been resting upon one of the iron brace rods of the Portland Harbor steamboat Forest Queen, flew toward the centre of the boat and disappeared, "that fellow has been the round trip with us clear to Long Island, and has now gone in among the life preserves to make himself comfortable. Watch now!"

Going along, Mr. Sargent shook one or two of the great mass of cork buoys that form overhead an almost continuous ceiling for the upper deck, and the disturbed bird flew out and settled upon one of the rods, but showing no disposition to leave the boat.

"I've seen those rods literally covered with sparrows," continued Mr. Sargent. "They will go over the entire route, but seem averse to landing at any of the islands, and return to the city."—Lewiston Journal.

TO DOROTHY.

I know where there is honey in a jar,
Meant for a certain little friend of mine;
And, Dorothy, I know where daisies are
That only wait small hands to intertwine
A wreath for such a golden head as thine.

The thought that thou art coming makes all glad;
The house is bright with blossoms high and low,
And many a little lass and little lad
Expectantly are running to and fro;
The fire within our hearts is all aglow.

We want thee, child, to share in our delight
On this high day, the holiest and best,
Because 'twas then, ere youth had taken flight,
Thy grandmamma, of women loveliest,
Made me of men most honored and most blest.

That naughty boy who led thee to suppose
He was thy sweetheart, has, I grieve to tell,
Been seen to pick the garden's choicest rose
And toddle with it to another belle,
Who does not treat him altogether well.

But mind not that, for let it teach thee this—
To waste no love on any youthful rover
(All youths are rovers, I assure thee, miss).
No, if thou wouldst true constancy discover,
Thy grandpa is perfect as a lover.

So come, thou playmate of my closing day,
The latest treasure life can offer me,
And with thy baby laughter make us gay.
Thy fresh young voice shall sing, my Dorothy,
Song that shall bid the feet of sorrow flee.

—Attributed to Gladstone.

THE CAPTAIN'S WAR STORIES.

Conducting Kentucky Red Fifty Feet Through Straws.

"When I was commanding a cavalry outpost during the war," said the Captain, a former Confederate officer, famous for his remarkable war stories, "we were camped near Salem, Va., and almost dead from exposure.

"I had received for my own use a five-gallon keg of prime Kentucky whiskey from an old friend, but before I had a chance to sample the liquor I was obliged to ride out on scout.

"All during that ride I was chuckling to myself at the treat I'd give the boys when we got back, and incidentally how I would enjoy some of the contents of that keg myself.

"Well, sir, when we came back after a five hours' ride in the rain, soaked through, hungry and disgusted, I told the men about that keg of old John Barleycorn. Did they smile? It was the nearest approach to a laugh that had been heard in that section of the country for many a day.

"Upon dismounting, all gathered near my tent. I entered, grabbed a tin cup, smiled and turned the spigot. But not a drop ran out. I pulled the air plug from the top, but there was only the tantalizing odor of the good old 'red eye' Kentucky alone brews. The men were muttering at what they called my ill-timed joke. The disappointment was greater than grieved humanity could bear.

"Suddenly I turned, saw a soldier happy in his unsteadiness, in front of a tent about fifty feet from me. In all that outpost the only whiskey seen in two weeks was that which I had received. 'Twas but a moment to connect the effect and cause. I found three heavy sleepers in that tent, the ground was wet with rare, soft, fragrant liquor, every tin washbasin, cup and vessel was filled with that heavenly liquor. The secret was out; so was the whiskey. I investigated and found that these men had learned of my having the keg, had cut some long rice straws, made a conduit fifty feet in length by joining them together, tapped the keg and run the whiskey into their own tent that distance away."

The captain stopped, lighted his cigar anew, while his auditors nervously shifted their positions. None spoke for a full minute. Then the little man who had tramped the region about Salem under "Old Glory" asked in a mild and apologetic voice:

"Captain, what does the rice crop amount to around the Salem country?"

"No rice was ever raised there or thereabouts," said the doughty but forgetful warrior.

The painful silence was finally broken by the captain himself.

Jove's Upward Cuts.

It is hard for the mind to conceive a lightning flash taking other than a downward course when it strikes objects on the earth's surface, but there are many well-authenticated cases of the bolt taking the opposite direction. A case in mind happened at Manchester, England, in August, 1888, where the bolt was distinctly seen to strike the base of a large cast-iron chimney, and then to take an upward slant, burning a crooked river in the metal from the point of contact to the top, where it escaped into the atmosphere and exploded in the manner of an immense fire ball.

At Monticello, Ia., on June 21, 1893, a tree near the residence of G. H. George was struck by a lightning flash and torn in a manner which clearly indicated that the current had passed upward from the earth.

The director of the Iowa Weather Service Corps tells that while upward lightning strokes are reckoned as freaks and phenomena by the laymen, they are not of infrequent occurrence, and have often been reported by meteorological observers.

In one or two of the Solomon Islands and at several places on the Indian Ocean coast of Africa the upward stroke is said to be the rule and the downward the exception.

Official Protection.

The weeping relatives gathered around the Governor's chair, but that official remained firm.

"No," he said to the mother, "I may consider your boy's pardon, but it is better for him that he remain for four or five months more. If I were to let him out now he would be just in time to contract a late case of 'Sweet Marie.'"

They saw the justice of the contention and withdrew.—Indianapolis Journal.

Scared Him.

It is sincerely to be hoped that Prof. Desant's method of revivification will not be encouraged. Two men once met in the cemetery. It was spring and the gentle rain was falling. "Fine day," said one: "fine day for the crops. It will bring everything up and out of ground." "Heaven forbid," said the other nervously; "I have two wives buried there!"—Truth.

The reader of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly on the blood and mucous surface of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer $100 for any case that it fails to cure.

OLD HOSS AND YOUNG COLTS.

They Make Lively a Damp Evening at Trade Temple Tenpins.

On the Board of Trade alleys last evening a very lively and interesting game was rolled between two picked teams, aptly styled the "Old Horses" and "The Colts". The Colts started off at a brisk canter, and set the pace to the quarter pole, glancing back with smiles of derision at the "Old Horses", plodding along contentedly in the rear. But as they started down the back stretch the "Old" ones climbed into their working harness and slowly working up to the bunch led by a nose in the fourth frame and never broke again, passing under the wire easy winners by 120 pins.

The grand-stand finish of "Old Horse" Petrie who came down the stretch neck and neck with "Colt" French and won out by a solitary pin, reminded one of the celebrated race between Yeast and Lettuce, when Lettuce won by a head.

Despite the severe colds with which many club members were suffering, the "rooters" were very much in evidence and made the echoes ring with their shouts of approval.

Local Indians.

Last evening the council of Paugh-Caugh-Naugh-Sinque Tribe No. 193, was well attended and full of interest. A committee was appointed to furnish semi-monthly musical and literary entertainment at the wigwam and in this manner increase the already large interest of the brethren.

The committee in charge of the reception and dance held by the tribe last Thursday evening were highly complimented on the marked success attending their efforts on that occasion. A public anniversary entertainment is among the possibilities of the not far distant future of this popular organization.

Grows Steadily in Popularity.

Opposite the new Y. M. C. A. Building is a busy establishment that was a success while the Y. M. C. A. was in its infancy, and that steadily grows in the popularity of the of the Plainfield public. MacDonald's grocery is meant, of course, and the reason that MacDonald's thrives greater every year is because as fast as the town grows a liberal percentage of its new trade attaches itself to that store on account of its superior goods and honest dealings; and the the old established trade stays right by it all the time.

Extracts the Pain-Causer.

Every sufferer from corns has been searching for what is now offered at Reynolds's pharmacy, a corn-cure that cures corns. This cure is as quick as it is effectual, as many Plainfielders can already testify, and as many more will find after accepting the hint offered in this paragraph.

Plainfield Building Never Ceases.

The foundations for S. T. Williams's new house on Sandford avenue is completed, and the frame work will be commenced immediately.

Old "King Coal".

Old "King Coal" is a cheery old soul
And a cheery old soul is he;
Neither whiff from a pipe nor quaff from a bowl
Can e'er such a comfort be;
Though the bleak winds blow, yet his heart's bright glow
Warms the homes by his presence blessed
And he'll come to one and all, who on Geo. O. Stevens call,

THOSE WE HAVE EVER WITH US.

What Plainfield Has Done for the Poor, and What She Ought to Do.

To the Honorable Common Council of the City of Plainfield.

GENTLEMEN: — Herewith please find annual report for the year 1894 of the Overseer of the Poor. There has been expended under my direction the following amounts:

6 Burials	$ 80 00
1,232 Quarts of Milk	87 70
Plainfield Relief Association, Prov'ns.	945 00
Muhlenberg Hospital, 1 patient	5 71
Fuel	215 65
Sundry Expenses	32 00
Salary, overseer	400 00
Salary, Physician and Extras	362 45
Dr. J. H. Carman, Ex. Insane	5 00
Dr. W. C. Boone, Ex. Insane	5 55
Rents	1,253 87
Board and Care	695 01
Total	$4,092 94

This has been another year of unusual stringency in the matter of labor, which has caused a large increase of applications for relief, and had it not been for the Citizens Organized Aid Association and many charitably disposed citizens, raising a large fund and expending it under the direction of the Street Commissioner, which was of great material benefit to many out of work, this department would otherwise have had heavier expenditures. It has been very difficult at times to know how to meet the increasing demands, as the facilities for taking care of the poor are not what they should be in a city that is equipped so well in every other department.

Many of our city poor are huddled together, surrounded by temptations and vice, with very little restraint, the result of which is the increase of pauperism and crime. Children reared under these conditions are very likely to follow in the same paths in which they have been accustomed to walk. This state of affairs should not continue in Plainfield. It has wealth enough and earnest men and women sufficient to remedy this condition of affairs, and it is hoped that before another year passes, we shall be able to congratulate ourselves upon great improvements in this direction, with a house and grounds suitable to our needs.

As heretofore, my books are open to the inspection of the public, should they desire more detailed information.

Respectfully submitted,
A. VANDERBEEK,
Overseer of the Poor.

Plainfield, N. J., Jan. 2, 1895.

Local McAllisters to Co-operate.

A plan to maintain a high grade of patronage for the hops of the Finderne hotel is to have them strictly invitation affairs, the cards to be distributed by some recognized leader in each of the towns of Somerville, Bound Brook, New Brunswick and Plainfield. Mr. Timpson has been requested to act as the social monitor for Plainfield in this respect, and other equally qualified men have been asked to co-operate in the other places mentioned. The system is a good one, and under its careful restrictions the Finderne has an era of success before it. A special feature of the hotel is that its Sunday dinner hour is to be from 1 to 3:30, to accommodate driving parties, and if the high quality of the cuisine can be maintained at that price the table d'hote will be but $1 a head. The house will be managed in true southern style, with an atmosphere of personal hospitality, and the service will be by the best servants in the world, trained Virginia Negroes. Being a pleasant driving distance from Plainfield, the Finderne is sure to become a popular resort for fastidious people of this section, as well as the New Yorkers who are finding out its merits.

Flocking to the Gym.

The new building is fast hastening towards completion. The gymnasium is about ready. Another order of apparatus from the Schumacher Co., Akron, Ohio, has arrived, including an A1 rowing machine, spring-board, hitch and kick, climbing ropes, and several other pieces. There is quite a rush for physical examinations. The director made 47 examinations since Jan. 1, and a large number of standing appointments are scheduled. Quite a number of the juniors have also been examined, and still the boys come. The classes are forming in good shape and it is expected to begin regular work on the gymnasium floor about the 15th.

Union County's Morality Leadership.

[From The Elizabeth Journal.]

Mr. Codding, of this county, has the honor of having introduced in the House the amendment to the State constition forever doing away with race track gambling. It is an honor to which any man might well aspire, an honor which especially belongs to Union County. Moreover it was an act of justice as well as of courtesy, that the House unanimously granted a hearing to Rev. Dr. Kempshall and Judge Lanning, on Tuesday afternoon next, in the interests of this amendment. Union County was the first to charge against this monstrous evil, and, not enforcing this time the Journal's claim to priority of attack, Dr. Kempshall was the leader in this great moral movement against the entrenched powers of corruption and infamy. It is right that, in the hour of the grandest victory this State has ever known, after the bitterest struggle in its history, the victorious general should deal a death blow to the monstrous system of gambling which he did so much to overthrow. This constitutional amendment has not, and ought not to have, any opposition, and when the people have passed upon it the question will never again be a question in New Jersey politics.

A Grand Old Man.

Col. James Moore, consulting engineer of the Central Railroad of New Jersey, yesterday entered upon his eighty-third year, he having been born Jan. 9, 1813. He was the pioneer of the Jersey Central system and with John Taylor Johnston carried out that, which looked to many at the time of its inception, a chimera. He is today hale and hearty, though the oldest civil engineer in point of practice in the United States, and the hope is that he may live to round out a full century.

He has earned the season of rest and recreation he is enjoying, and the good wishes of everyone with whom he was ever brought in contact go out to him as he passes another milestone on the journey of life.

Who Owns This Dog?

Percy Ohl noticed the face of a fine St. Bernard dog protruded from under some blankets, in a wagon driven by two men, near South Plainfield.

Mr. Ohl, suspecting the dog had been stolen, questioned the men. They said they bought the dog from a colored man near Dunellen; and had given him $5 for it. Mr. Ohl told them he knew the dog, and offered them $5, but they would not give the dog up for less than $10. This was promised them, if they would return to Plainfield with it, but to this they would not consent. They finally accepted $7, all the money Mr. Ohl had with him, and he promised to send the other $3 to their address. Mr. Ohl has their address, and the dog.

He says it is a very fine specimen, and he hopes to return the dog to its owner, who can have it by proving property.

NEW YORK LEGISLATURE.

Both Houses Go To Work With a Dash.

Albany, Jan. 10.—The winter session of the legislature of 1895 was opened last night with a rush. The assembly chamber was brilliantly lighted and was thronged with visitors. The members quickly got down to business.

The bills introduced were by Mr. Horton, making it a misdemeanor for two or more persons to engage in a public or private sparring exhibition, with or without gloves; Mr. Blake, abolishing the death penalty; Mr. Finn, reducing pawn brokers' fees to 1½ per cent. a month for the first month; Mr. Finn, fixing the price of gas at $1 per 1,000 feet in cities of more than 800,000 inhabitants; Mr. Blake, allowing liquor to be sold on Sunday between 1 and 3 o'clock in the afternoon and 6 and 10 in the evening; Mr. Foley, his excise bill of last year allowing saloons in New York and Brooklyn to open a side door during certain hours on Sunday.

The senators were also on hand early and talked over the prospects for the winter before the session opened. Governor Morton sent to the senate the following nominations: Arthur E. Sullivan of Rochester, county judge of Monroe, in place of Judge W. E. Werner, resigned, to serve until Jan. 1, 1896. Alfred Spring of Franklinville, justice supreme court, eighth judicial district, in place of Judge Albert Haight, resigned, to serve until Jan. 1, 1896. Managers of the Hudson River State hospital, George F. Shrady of New York, to succeed himself, and Francis N. Mann of Troy, to fill vacancy caused by death of John Sherry.

QUAY'S CHARGES.

Committeeman Martin Not Inclined to Answer Them.

Philadelphia, Jan. 10.—The republican national committeeman to whom Mr. Quay referred in the senate yesterday, "As not being able to preserve his plighted faith in regards to an important nomination," in Philadelphia, because he was under a salary from a corporation and was compelled to do what that corporation wished, was David Martin, the republican leader of Philadelphia. Mr. Martin was found sick in bed suffering from overwork, during the mayorality nomination fight just ended.

Mr. Martin was not inclined to make any reply to Mr. Quay's charges. He refused to answer any questions as to whether he was under a salary from a corporation, but he did say "That the nomination of Mr. Warwick was not the work of any corporation. No corporation ever mentioned Mr. Warwick's name to me and I favored his nomination because I believed that it was for the best interests of the party to do so. The followers of Mr. Penrose are all loyal republicans, and although they may feel a little sore over their chief's defeat, they will turn in and work for the nominee."

A pistol shot rang out, and Mrs. Clements reached the room in time to catch her son in her arms. Two pistols were found. One was in young Clement's hip pocket. The other was found in the garden below the window. It had one chamber discharged, and, it is supposed, was the one from which the fatal shot was fired. No arrests have been made.

IS PRACTICALLY KILLED

Fate of the Currency Bill in the House.

Financial Legislation Crippled for This Session—The Situation as Viewed by Senators—Mr. Voorhees Thinks That the Condition of Affairs Is V. ry Grave Indeed.

Washington, Jan. 10.—The fate of the currency and banking bill was probably decided in the house yesterday when by a vote of 130 to 124 it refused to second Mr. Outhwaite's demand for the previous question on the passage of a resolution reported from the committee on rules regulating the further consideration of the bill. The republicans voted against the rule because they could get no modification of its terms by which they could be assured of reaching a vote on the question of rehabilitating state banks, and the radical silver men because they could get no assurance that they would have an opportunity of voting on Mr. Bland's substitute providing for the free coinage of silver at the ratio of 16 to 1. Upon the announcement of the result of the vote, Mr. Outhwaite withdrew the resolution.

The action of the house in practically killing the currency bill is looked upon by democrats in the senate as fraught with danger to the party now in power. The results that may grow from this vote are none the less dreaded because they were in a measure anticipated. Mr. Voorhees, chairman of the senate committee on finance, within a short time after the vote had been taken, sent for Messrs. Jones and Vest and these three members of the finance committee conferred together for half an hour. Mr. Voorhees deemed the situation so grave that he sent for his colleagues to suggest to them the advisability of collecting a special meeting of the committee for to-day at 2 o'clock and in this view of the situation his colleagues agreed. In speaking of the matter to a United Press reporter Mr. Voorhees said the condition of affairs was very grave and the house having practically abandoned the currency schedule it behooved the senate committee to meet, confer and consult with each other and endeavor to ascertain if they could agree upon some line of action to be inaugurated in the senate. Whether such agreement could be reached or not Mr. Voorhees did not pretend to know.

As soon as it was known that this special meeting was to be held there were a number of hurried conferences on the part of the republican members of the committee. During the afternoon while Mr. Pasco was speaking on the Nicaraguan canal bill members of the republican steering committee consulted with their republican colleagues and the conferences with silver republicans were long and earnest.

Republicans will take the position that there is not sufficient time to enter into the construction of a currency system before this congress adjourns, nor is there even time enough to patch it up decently. While this will give their opponents to understand that they must expect no help from the republicans on any currency measure, the republicans will state that they are willing to aid the democrats in giving the treasury sufficient revenue to meet the expenditures of the government and will while so doing, emphasize the fact that this is more a question of revenue than of currency.

If the democrats desire to prevent the steadily increasing deficiency republicans will suggest a plan as follows:

Let the tax on beer be increased one dollar a barrel, if revenue is needed, say the republicans, and they argue that by this method something more than thirty millions of additional revenue will be collected speedily and easily, for the last internal revenue report shows that this amount was collected under the present tax of one dollar a barrel. If democrats believe this will not be sufficient to meet the deficiency, republicans will also suggest the advisability of a horizontal increase in existing tariff rates of between 15 and 20 per cent. This increase they say can be made to continue in operation for a definite period only. Precedents will be quoted to show that such an increase has been made in the past to provide for an emergency, once in particular in 1872. The fact that the democrats attempted to decrease the revenue in the horizontal manner will be quoted to show that they would be justified in increasing it in the same way.

This and nothing more will be agreed to by the republicans, and any attempt to do more will meet with opposition on the part of a very vigorous minority. The silver men announce that they will not permit any temporary expediency to be placed on the statute books. The free coinage of silver at a fair ratio is, from their standpoint the only kind of a financial system that can afford the country any relief. If anything else is attempted they boldly assert that they will debate it to death. Upon the question of how best to raise immediate money, the republicans are however united, and such a proposition they say can pass, if the democrats desire it. There is nothing in the situation to warrant the belief that any kind of financial or currency scheme can pass the senate.

CURRENCY BILL GOSSIP.

Secretary Carlisle Still Hopes for Legislation.

Washington, Jan. 10.—Secretary Carlisle expressed his regret at the action of the house, but does not despair of some financial legislation still passing the house. He suggested that it would be better not to move in the matter again for a few days but that the intervening time be occupied by the friends of the bill in consultation with the silver men and other democrats who opposed it with a view to agreeing to some compromise which will meet or partially meet their objections. Before leaving the capitol the secretary secured several copies of the substitute bill which he carried back to the department, and which it is understood he will consider carefully and endeavor so to amend as to make it more acceptable to the house.

Speaker Crisp Surprised.

Washington, Jan. 10.—Speaker Crisp, although a staunch friend of the Carlisle bill, takes its side-tracking philosophically. He confessed his surprise, however, that the resolution from the committee on rules should have been defeated. It is the first time, he says, that a resolution from that committee, has failed to carry in the house during the four years he has held the office of speaker. He is the more surprised inasmuch as the rule had the unanimous indorsement of the caucus.

Mr. Reed Uncommunicative.

Washington, Jan. 10.—Mr. Reed was asked if he had anything to say regarding the vote on the Outhwaite resolution. "I believe not," he answered. "It seems to be one of those things that go without saying, at least it went without say, however, that I was surprised at the suddenness with which it went. It was not my intention to fight the rule, and I did not fight it. There was no necessity for it."

WORKMEN MANGLED.

Trestle Work Supporting a Bridge Collapses.

Dundas, Ont., Jan. 10.—A trestlework, 75 feet high, supporting a bridge being built on the new Toronto, Hamilton & Buffalo railroad, across a small stream about five miles from here, collapsed last evening just as the workmen were quitting work for the night. Three men were taken out terribly crushed, at least one of whom will die. Several others sustained less serious injuries. The following were the most seriously injured:

Andrew Rogers, compound fracture both legs, left arm broken in two places, bad scalp wounds, one eye gouged out. Cannot live.

James Riley, compound fracture left leg and injured internally, recovery doubtful.

John Kerr, limbs bruised and badly injured internally.

Had the accident occurred a few minutes earlier there would have been a great loss of life, as it was most of the big force had left off work.

Christian Endeavor Convention.

Boston, Jan. 10.—It is estimated that when the fourteenth international Christian Endeavor convention is held here next July there will be from 50,000 to 60,000 members and delegates in attendance, which will make it one of the largest religious gatherings ever held. Mechanics' hall, accommodating 8,000 people, will be used and two or three tents, seating 10,000 people each, with the various large churches for overflow meetings. As to entertainment of delegates, the Christian Endeavor plan will prevail, each delegate paying his own expenses.

Forfeited Land Thrown Open.

Marquette, Mich., Jan. 10.—Eight thousand acres of the forfeited Ontonagon and Brule lands was thrown open to settlers this morning. A dozen men wrapped in fur coats and blankets stood in line in front of the government building all night. Some had boxes and lanterns, others had no heat except that supplied by their clothing. The first man took his place Monday at noon. The late comers will get as good land as the men who have exposed themselves to days and nights of severely cold weather.

Thought He Was in Battle.

Kingston, N. Y., an. 10.—The mysterious disappearance of F. Edda, a Japanese student from St. Stephen's college, Annandale, Dutchess county, has occasioned much alarm. It is learned that he left his room at midnight on Monday last, and went into the storm of sleet and snow with scarcely any clothing. He was seized with sudden illness at the college on Saturday, becoming violent and delirious, and refusing medical aid. He imagined he was fighting Chinamen with his countrymen.

Supposed Murderer Arrested.

New Orleans, Jan. 10.—One of Chicago's worst criminals, and who is at present wanted in that city for a murder committed on last election day was captured here. Captain Schuttler pronounced him to be John Sampson alias "The Major," a fugitive from Chiago. He says he has known Sampson for the past fifteen years and has arrested him a number of times for different crooked transactions. It is said that Sampson was a witness in the famous Dr. Cronin murder case.

Jumped from a Train.

Chester, Pa., Jan. 10.—As the northbound express train due in this city at 5:25 o'clock, was passing Moore's station last night, a well dressed stranger jumped from the train and was instantly killed. On the clothing left by him on the car seat were found the names "Louis R. B," and "J. Edgar Keefer, 1121 Sherry street, Baltimore."

Senator Hoar Renominated.

Boston, Jan. 10.—The republicans in joint caucus renominated Senator Hoar by acclamation. The democratic members of the house and senate in joint caucus unanimously nominated Hon. John E. Russell, of Leicester, to be United States senator, to succeed Hon. George F. Hoar.

For Mayor of Philadelphia.

Philadelphia, Jan. 10.—In the republican city convention yesterday City Solicitor Charles F. Warwick was nominated for mayor, receiving 648 votes against 233 for Senator Boies Penrose and one for ex-City Treasurer George D. McCreedy.

PAIN BANISHED SLEEP.

A RHEUMATIC TELLS A WONDERFUL STORY.

Less Than Half a Bottle of Munyon's New Remedy Restored Him to Health.

James Buckley, 215 Washington street, Newark, N. J., says: "I have been suffering from rheumatism for a number of years. The pains were exceedingly severe and I could not sleep nights. The remedies I obtained did me little or no good, nor did the doctors whom I consulted. This had gone on, each recurring attack being more painful and prolonged than the previous one. I could not get relief until I commenced taking Munyon's Rheumatism Cure. Less than one-half a bottle drove all the rheumatism out of my system and I am as well and strong as I ever was in my life. I consider the remedy a wonderful one and take pleasure in recommending it."

Munyon's Rheumatism Cure is guaranteed to cure rheumatism in any part of the body. Acute or muscular rheumatism cured in from one to five days. It never fails to cure sharp, shooting pains in the arms, legs, sides, back or breast, or soreness in any part of the body in from one to three hours. THE BRINK OF MADNESS

An End To Which Many Are Blindly Rushing.

MANY PATHS LEAD STRAIGHT TO THIS TERRIBLE END.

Are You Hopelessly Struggling Along This Dangerous Road?

The world-renowned poet, Gray, says: "The paths of glory lead but to the grave." All paths lead to the grave, but especially do those dangerous walks of life, overwork, strain on the system, dissipation, improper attention to the rules of health, involving sleepless nights, tired bodies and weak and shattered nerves, lead to an early death, or a more dreaded and fearful fate.

Notice the strength and powerful advice in the following letter, written by Mrs. J. Wesley Mand, of Northfield Mass.

"About 18 months ago, my daughter Jennie went into a large store, as clerk, and was obliged to make long days of about 14 hours, and the work proved too hard for her. She was completely run down, being prostrated by nervous debility. She had terrible restless nights, and was unable to sleep hardly at all. Her head troubled her being dizzy, and her limbs ached, and frequently she would sit down and cry, she was in such pain.

MISS JENNIE MAND.

"They had Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy in the store where she work, and the proprietor recommended her to take it, which she did.

"She wrote me while she was taking the Nervura, that it had done wonders for her. She is now entirely cured of her nervousness, and has not been so well in years.

"She was so nervous that she could hardly sit at table, and any little noise would startly her like a wild partridge.

"She has now used three bottles, and we are thankful to say that she is well, thanks to kind Providence and Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy."

It is beyond the power of words to tell the wonders that are done every day by that greatest of all medicines, Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy. No medicine ever before possessed such wonderful powers to cure. Try it, and see what it will do for you. It will make you strong and well.

It is not a patent medicine, but the prescription of the most successful living specialist in curing nervous and chronic diseases, Dr. Greene, of 35 West 14th St., New York City. He has the largest practice in the world, and this grand medical discovery is the result of his vast experience. The great reputation of Dr. Greene is a guarantee that his medicine will cure, and the fact that he can be consulted by anyone, at any time, free of charge, personally or by letter, gives absolute assurance of the beneficial action of this wonderful medicine.

FOR WOMEN'S EYES.

INCIDENTALLY A FEW FACTS THAT MIGHT PLEASE MEN.

Novel Treatment of the Dress Question. An Authority of 1738 Holds Good Today. Fashion to the Winds—Common Sense to the Fore.

The possibility of woman's ability to conform to the matter of hygiene in the matter of dress, and yet not appear so unfashionable in her attire as to be thought grotesque was thus set forth by Miss Harriett S. Sackett, director of the department of domestic art of the Pratt Institute of Brooklyn in a recent address before the Institute of Art and Sciences.

Miss Sackett dealt with the question of beauty in dress, declaring that in the rush of cities, where even a daffodil or a sprouting tree was a too expensive and unnecessary luxury to have always near, we should find in dress a means of compensation for the lack of nature's beauties.

"We must all be clothed," said Miss Sackett. "Why not make make our clothes beautiful?

"Why should it be thought a waste of time, thought and money to spend a just portion of our earnings in obtaining beautiful dress? Fashion and caprice have ruled us for so many years, seeking merely something new each fall and spring, that beauty could claim no direct relationship.

"A nation's art has always been mirrored in its style of dress. The Grecian dress was graceful, flowing in beautiful lines, and its influence has been felt through many centuries.

"During the middle ages dress became grotesque and complicated, like most other arts. When classic art was revived in Italy early in the sixteenth century, and created the beautiful masterpieces of Titian, Raphael, and their contemporaries, beauty in dress revived, to be copied later by France and other countries. Styles of dress became less ornate and more dignified and simple. In Italy, where true art was never quite lost, the styles of dress was never quite so grotesque as in France or Germany. In the time of the Louis in France dress became the most exaggerated.

"A full rigged ship was considered the most fitting ornament for the top of a lady's head in the time of Marie Antoinette. From that time until a few years ago, when some English artists banded themselves together and strove to revive classic ideals in house decoration and dress, fashion went on tying us up in tight bags or spreading us out in balloons, season after season."

Miss Sackett ascribed to Ruskin and the pre-Raphaelites the fact that a knowledge of beauty in relation to the body and dress has been gradually spreading in civilized countries, particularly in England and America.

"For the last ten years," said she, "it has been possible to wear clothes almost beautiful without appearing so odd as to be ridiculous. Felix of Paris said recently that his first thought in planning a gown was whether it would suit the wearer.

"Dress should express something of the nature or individuality of the wearer. To create beauty in dress, study beauty in all forms of art. Beautiful dress will not prevent free movements of the body or head, or bind the arms. A knowledge of beauty in dress will not load a small, slight body with yards of crinoline or haircloth, or permit the head of a small woman to carry the weight of the huge Gainsborough and feathers so becoming and suitable to her stately sisters.

"The fitness for its use as well as the personality of the wearer must always be considered in the matter of dress. Fabrics should be chosen that reflect the light softly. True health and beauty are one, and a real hygienic dress must be beautiful. We need to study the ideal proportions of the human form to produce beauty in figure. Beauty of form is produced by lines flowing one out of the other in undulations."

Miss Sackett said that the reason probably that large sleeves were so pleasing to most persons was because the hips of so many women have been made to appear unnaturally large by undue pressure at the waist line, and the large sleeves balanced the width of the hips. She advised women to adopt styles individually and characteristically becoming to them without regard to being in the height of fashion, and then gave them the following wise comments upon the subject of taste in dress, which she said she had discovered in the Gentleman's Magazine of the date of 1738.

"Everything which alters or disguises nature proceeds from a false taste. Everything which forces nature beyond its due bounds proceeds from a bad taste. Everything which eclipses the beauties or exposes the defects of nature proceeds from a want of taste. Everything that constrains nature or hinders the freedom of action proceeds from a depraved taste. Everything which loads nature with superfluous ornaments proceeds from affectation of taste. Everything which is out of character is certainly out of taste, and though the fashion can never influence taste, yet taste should always influence fashion."

A Remarkable Creature.

The most remarkable creature in the world is the hydra. It does not amount to much physically, for it is nothing but a sack, open at one end and fastened by the other to a stone, but it is almost impossible to kill it. Turn a hydra inside out and it will get along just as well as before. Trembley, the French naturalist, cut hydras in slices, and each, in a few days, became a full-grown animal. He grafted them, and produced monsters with six mouths and only one body. He divided them longitudinally, and produced a cluster of hydras. He found this creature is superior even to decomposition, for when a part of a hydra's body decays, it throws it off and replaces it, as a matter of course.

An All-Sufficient Reason.

Bobby (conclusively)—Because I can't pick 'em out.—Truth.

He—So that I can live up to my profession.—Brooklyn Life.

MYRA'S CALLER.

He Had No Right to Be There, but as for Dan, That's Different.

"The world is hollow," remarked the girl in red.

"It is," gloomily assented the girl whose new gown does not fit; "but I don't see how you ever found it out."

"By accident, dear. It happened the day after the cards were sent out. I had a note from Dan saying he must see me before I was Jim's wife. Of course I didn't really care for Dan, but it is soothing to one's vanity to know that the best man is dying of envy of the bridegroom, who has no idea of it."

"So you said you would see him?"

"I did. I felt that it would do Jim no harm if Dan did tell me once more that life was a blank without me; and it was really my last chance, too. Still, I didn't dare to let him come to the house."

"But where else could you see him?"

"At Myra's. She is to be maid of honor, you know, and Jim used to be quite devoted to her, so I knew she'd never dare to tell on me lest people think her jealous."

"When I want advice I shall know where to come for it."

"Very well, do. Well, I didn't send her word that I was coming, for I didn't want anything on paper. As luck would have it, just as I was starting, Jim sent up a box of roses and a melancholy note saying that a business engagement which he could not shirk, would prevent him from coming up that evening."

"You were in luck."

"So I thought. Well, I just threw myself on Myra's mercy. She wasn't a bit pleased, as I could see, but she submitted with the best grace she could. She said she would keep everybody out of the library, so we could have a long, quiet evening, and not to worry about her, as she would in all probability have company."

"That was nice of her."

"Oh, very nice. Dan came early, and we had a perfectly lovely time. He begged me to elope the day before the wedding, recited two poems about his despair, and hinted at suicide. Oh, it was splendid! I cried myself to a jelly. At about 10:30 I really couldn't stand it any longer, so I told Dan that we must go in and speak to Myra, for the front parlor was so quiet that her caller had evidently failed to come. So after another eternal farewell, we went in."

"Well?"

"It wasn't well; it was ill! Myra's caller was there; he was Jim; he was holding her hand, and bidding her good-by forever! Oh, was ever a poor girl so cruelly deceived as I?"—Chicago Tribune.

A GIFTED PARISIAN DOG.

He Knew a Better Trick than Barking at the Burglars.

An amusing story of canine sagacity is told in a recent number of La Lanterne of Paris. M. and Mme. Herisson, living in the Rue St. Sauveur, went to the theatre one evening, leaving their domicile guarded only by a very intelligent little dog, who answered to the name of Castor. They valued him highly, and often remarked:

"Castor? We would not sell him for 10,000 francs—not even to the Pope himself."

They had not been long away when burglars entered the house. Castor, who was at that moment in the kitchen, whiling away the hours by chasing his tail, heard the noise, and not recognizing his master's step, pricked up his ears and listened. A moment more and he decided it must be thieves. To the proverbial fidelity of his race there was added in this wonderful dog the wisdom of serpents. Realizing that if he barked the intruders would sieze and silence him forever, he sat down, covered his head with his paws and thought intently. At last a light broke over his mind, and he stole noiselessly from the house and ran swiftly to a nearby building which was in the course of construction. There he seized a lighted lantern in his mouth and returned with it to the house.

The ruse met with the success it deserved. The thieves, seeing the light in the adjoining room, believed themselves detected, and fled. Castor's joy knew no bounds, and when his owners returned they found him still rubbing his paws with satisfaction.

Spoiled a Cycling Romance.

A cycling romance has been spoiled, and so has a cycling costume, in one of the pleasantest suburbs of South London. Last Sunday morning, as a gentleman was wheeling his way along his favorite country lane, he gradually overtook a lady bicyclist attired in the rational costume, which, for a wonder, became her well.

Elegantly cut, faultlessly finished, the fair rider's attire, from hat to gaiters, spoke the lady—so far, at least, as style went—and the critical spectator was fast becoming a convert to the æsthetic claims of the new fashion when the fair rider wobbled, hesitated and was lost in a ditch at the side of the road. Quickly he rushed to her assistance, helped her to her feet, and dusted her carefully down, the while she thanked him in stammering accents for his courtesy. That voice, he thought, where had he heard it before, and he lifted his eyes to hers. Of course he had heard those tones—they were his cook's.—London Daily Telegraph.

Her Limit.

"I cannot imagine," said the minister, "any more shocking, dangerous, painful and trying situation for any young girl to be placed in than to be engaged to two men at the same time. Think what must be the sensations of a young woman who finds herself in a position so dangerous and so disgraceful!"

"I should think it might make her feel a little soupy," returned the young lady, glancing lightly at a picture of her father's summer home at Bar Harbor; but I never got down so far as that. The smallest line of men I ever had on my hands was three."—Puck.

Why She Smiled.

Judge Peterby, of Harlem, is very absent minded, particularly when he takes a drop too much. He has a large family of children, and meeting a little girl on the street, he stopped and said to her:

"Little girl, why do you smile at me in such a friendly manner?"

"Because you are my papa."—Texas Siftings.

THE SUN'S FASHIONS.

GOWNS THAT ARE MUCH TOO RICH FOR PAPA'S PURSE.

The Styles of 1894 Reviewed. Near Approach to the Crinoline, but the Catastrophe Happily Averted. Beaded Trimming and Spangles are Popular.

In reviewing the fashions of 1894 the special features which stand out from all the details of dress are the elegance of materials, the sumptuous coloring, daring combinations and increasing tendency toward elaborate and extravagant methods of fashioning our garments. Something has been borrowed from almost every century and country, and each season has surpassed the preceding one in point of magnificence and variety in design. Nothing can be much more beautiful in texture or exquisite in color, unless we weave our cloth of gold and trace the pattern with precious stones. The lines of fashion have been gradually and generously extended in a manner which is dangerously suggestive of crinoline, but it can be recorded to the years' credit that it did not precipitate this dreaded calamity.

Never in the history of dress has there been greater beauty and richness of fabrics or such picturesque and artistic fancies from which to choose. Luxuriant abundance has been the battle cry in all matters of fashion, and there is as yet no promise that there will be a lesser degree of elegance or quantity required in the year to come. The sleeve, on which the fashion designers have spent so much energy and wrought such wondrous results, has no prospect of a rest. Renewed efforts are to be directed toward getting the fullness into a drooping attitude, so that the elbow shall be the point of expansion. One of the special features of the season's modes is the extended revival of velvet for entire gowns, wraps, waists, trimmings, and various purposes of combination, which make it so popular. Silks and flowered satins in large old-time patterns have come into fashion again, and furs have developed possibilities of elegance and style in cut and fit which have never been known before. The furriers have become so skilled in the art of managing them that almost every advantage of style is giving to the figure as with more pliable materials. The fur bodice, worn with a cloth or silk skirt and sleeves, is one of the season's fancies, and entire dresses are made of sealskin and carcul. In contrast are the delightful gauzes and chiffons which the year has produced and combined with every other material on the list with such charming effect. And crepon has unfolded like flowers, with all sorts of designs and color effects, which have increased its price and consequent demand. Trimmings are beaded and jewelled and spangled with renewed magnificence, and laces have assumed an importance in the fashionable world which has not been known since the days of Queen Elizabeth.

Here is a handsome dinner gown eloquently representative of some of the season's elegances and peculiar combinations of color. It is made of jonquil moire silk with a violet satin front in the skirt, festooned across with pearl and amber beads, in the Louis XIII. style. The bodice is of violet satin trimmed with beads and rose point lace, arranged in pointed berthas. A late fancy consists of strings of beads, in emerald green, amber, black or white, arranged to fall from a glistening spangled yoke or a low neck over a white chiffon waist to the belt, where they are caught in blouse fashion. This blouse effect is a distinct feature of the winter's fashion, and is said to be almost universally adopted in Paris. Some of the waists have three box plaits, some only one, which extend from a fancy contrasting yoke of lace or velvet to the belt, while others are made with plaits to the neck, both back and front, and narrow plaited frills of chiffon in another color are arranged to fall jabot-like between the plaits.

Black spangles are sure to harmonize with any color, but blue, green and gold are just as fashionable. Artificial flowers for dress adornment have gained in favor, and they are so exquisitely made and delicately scented with their natural perfume that the effect is almost as good as though they were real, and much more durable. They are beautifully arranged in garnitures for evening dresses, and made up into collarettes, muffs and all sorts of fanciful shapes. Violets retain their favor, but roses, gardenias, and lilies of the valley are quite as much worn.—N. Y. Sun.

WALTER IRVING CLARKE, Managing Editor.

CITY EDITION, 4 O'CLOCK.

PLAINFIELD, N. J., JAN. 10, 1895

FOR PLAINFIELD'S PROGRESS.

Garfield's Gallant Up-hill Fight.

On Jan. 10, 1862, Garfield, then colonel of the Forty-second Ohio infantry, won a minor yet decisive and important victory over the Confederates under Humphrey Marshall, on the Big Sandy, in eastern Kentucky. Marshall's force, numbering about 2,000 men, consisting of Virginians and Kentuckians, had been stationed on the Big Sandy in order to encourage and protect the enlistment of Kentucky troops for the Confederate service. Garfield, who had received orders to drive Marshall out of the state early in January, advanced up the river with 2,000 troops of all arms. The Confederates awaited him in a strong position on a ridge covering the road to Virginia, with a battery planted in the gorge of a fork of the Big Sandy.

The first advance of the Union troops, made with a combined force of cavalry and infantry, was repulsed by the artillery fire. Garfield then sent forward a detachment, which he subsequently twice re-enforced, to dislodge the infantry supports of the battery from the heights on either side. This was accomplished by a gallant up hill fight shortly before dark, and Marshall retreated across the Virginia border.

GEORGE L. KILMER.

The office of speakership of a New Jersey Republican House is not calculated to permit a man to maintain an equilibrious temper, but so long as Judge Cross has sunny-natured McBride, the man of the iron-gray curls, as his right bower, he will never have a chance to get real cross. And with Voorhees fostering benignity, and with the Westfield Assemblyman of the pure white smile continually codding them, the Union County contingent ought to make quite a happy family of the Legislature it is running.

That paper which boasts of itself as the local Republican organ, yesterday expressed much displeasure against the men who help supply the brains and working power of not only the local Republicans but also the city government.

The first victim to receive a scolding was Mayor Gilbert, whom it will not forgive for admitting what The Daily Press has been claiming all along, that the police force of Plainfield is numerically inadequate for the proper protection of the city. Editorially The Press has been reiterating that the police force should be increased, that the present force was an efficient one as far as it went, but that the territory was too large for the handful of bluecoats to cover thoroughly and continuously. Editorially the organ has been hammering the police, and especially the Chief, because it had a spite against that Chief and against some of his men, and because it has candidates of its own p[illegible] circle whom it wishes to have installed in their places.

In his message the Mayor gave praise to the police whom the organ has been hounding, and in that message he urged that five more patrolmen be appointed So closely did the Mayor follow the suggestions of The Press that even the number of new officers which he proposed was exactly the same as The Press suggested. And because the Mayor recognizes the wisdom of the course pointed out by the people's paper, a title won and maintained by The Daily Press, and because he does not coincide with the organ in its frantic claim that the Chief should be removed, the organ proceeds to express its opinion of the Mayor in apoplectic terms. The attack is of no weight, but it affords an interesting commentary on the ingratitude of its author, who sang a very different tune when he was after a salaried office which he confessed he very much needed, and which he never would have secured had it not been for the very Mayor and other men whom he last night assailed and whom he continually assails in the columns of the paper in which he is permitted to intrude his personality.

From the Mayor the organ proceeds to abuse the Chief of Police. In this article The Press has already given a pretty broad hint of why the organ is vilifying the Chief. There is no justice in the attack, nor has there been in any of those preceding it. George W. Grant has been at the head of the police department of Plainfield during the most important years of that office, and the Mayor and the Council and the citizens at large are agreed that he has been a most active, faithful and efficient officer. The value of a police force depends greatly on the management of its chief, and the worth of the chief is established in the condition of the city's peace, good order and morality during his rule. For a city of its magnitude, its cosmopolitan population, and its small number of officers, Plainfield has a right to claim superiority over most of its sisters in the matter of public decency. Its streets are freer from disorder, and its entire territory is freer from the municipal diseases which a police force can reach and abate, than most communities in this State of proverbial justice.

The organ has made its principal scorings against the Chief on the ground that he was permitting the notorious illegal sale of liquor. What does the Mayor say? He says (see his message as published in The Daily Press of Jan. 8.) that "the illegal selling of liquor has engaged the attention of the police during the past year; several offenders have been convicted, but owing to the fact that the laws to prevent the illegal sale of liquor seem to favor the liquor sellers it is almost impossible to enforce a penalty". He records the activity of the police, and shows that the offenders are secure in their unlawful practice, not through police inactivity but through the weakness of the law. Does he say that Chief Grant must go? On the contrary, he says the bad law must go, and to be sure that a better one will take its place he has put the matter in the hands of that unfailing advocate, the Corporation Counsel. He points out other defective, weak and inadequate ordinances and urges their correction, and clearly shows that instead of being lax and sluggish and altogether worthless, as the organ would have us believe, the Plainfield police are overworked and hampered by legal technicalities, but enforcing the ordinances as far as in their power they can.

Councilman Frost comes in for a big share of the general pounding by the organ. Whereas some time ago he was lauded to the skies by this same organ, for his masterly management of the water and sewer department of the Council, now he is charged with being careless and frivolous and sensational. When the report of Mr. Frost's committee on the water-supply investigation appeared in The Daily Press, The Press took occasion to raise criticism upon some of its points. That criticism it still adheres to, and for that criticism Mr. Frost thanked the editor as he said he courted honest criticism as a means of bringing out all the facts. And he further said that he had gone too deeply into this matter of water supply to be mistaken, and had an abundance of facts in reserve. Honest criticism he courts; honest criticism he expects, from The Daily Press: but because his report is open to criticism is no reason for the personal affront offered by the organ of his own party.

Here are three honorable and zealous public officials of Plainfield bitterly assailed in one day by the organ which but a short time ago was strenuously advocating the re-election of two of them, and whose police reports, if they are true to the facts, daily record the activity and success of the third in his efforts to maintain order and decency in the city.

The Daily Press does not believe, and the people do not believe, the charges which this Republican paper is making against these Republican officials, and unless The Press and the people are greatly mistaken these gentlemen will not permit themselves to be bulldozed into heeding the organ's frenzied appeals to have its own pet wishes carried out through their instrumentality.

The Advance of the Trolley.

Righteous protests against the violence of the trolley cars are heard throughout the country. And yet one of the first signs of growth and life in the smaller cities is the introduction of the trolley. Half a dozen years ago a New York capitalist went to Syracuse to make some investments. In front of his hotel a horse car stopped for twenty minutes and then began its return trip. The capitalist packed his grip and returned to New York, remarking that a town of twenty minute horse cars was not a place for his money. To day Syracuse is threaded with trolley cars and has grown in population since then some 25,000. That same year another traveller stopped in Auburn one Sunday, and, after a morning walk, brought up at the top of Genesee street hill, a fashionable part of the town and entered a horse car. After a quarter of an hour the conductor was asked when the car would start. "When church is out," he answered. The only Sunday cars were run to the churches and sent back when they closed.

WHAT HARD WATER DOES.

The hard water necessarily in common use for drinking purposes in many places tends to cause the deposit of calcareous matter in the Kidneys and Bladder, paodueing the agonizing and dangerous diseases known as Gravel and Stone. Formerly the only relief from these affections was by painful surgical operations, and even they were of questionable value. Now the work of removal of those foreign substances from the delicate organs they clog, irritate and torture, is safely, speedily and painlessly done by Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy. No other medicine can be relied upon so implicitly. In every case of Kidney Disease it should be resorted to at once.

REMOVAL.

Dr. Lighthill begs leave to give notice that he has removed to

NO. 132 CRESCENT AVE.

(a few doors from his former location) where he can be consulted on all chronic diseases of whatever name and nature.

Dr. Lighthill refers with pardonable pride to the success of his practice in Plainfield and submits below a few of the many testimonials which he has received from grateful patients. A mass of similar ones can be seen at his office.

AN ALMOST MIRACULOUS CURE.

The Statement of Mr. Edward Teel, Jr., of Dunellen, N. J.

TO THE PUBLIC:

From a sense of duty I desire to call public attention to the almost miraculous cure which Dr. Lighthill effected in the case of my wife. For eleven years she had been afflicted with piles of an unusual severe and distressing character. She suffered every day of her life the most intense pain, attended with frequent and profuse hemorrhage. This state of things debilitated her entire system until she became a perfect wreck of her former self.

We made every effort to obtain a cure but they all resulted in bitter disappointment, although a number of physicians of excellent reputations for skill in that direction had treated her case. She grew worse and worse all the time, the pain became perfectly unbearable and I felt she could not bear the strain of her condition much longer. In this extremity, a friend of mine, Mr. W. E. Dilts, a resident of Roselle, N. J., a passenger conductor on the New Jersey Central told me that he had been similarly affected, and had been permanently cured by Dr. Lighthill, after other medical skill had failed. He assured me that the doctor would cure my wife, no matter how severe her case may be, and his prediction proved perfectly correct. In spite of her desperate condition, Dr. Lighthill, I am glad to say, has effected a complete and perfect cure in her case, and has given her new life.

Since the cure has been effected she has gained in health and strength and is so improved in appearance that her friends scarcely recognize her. They all consider her cure as almost miraculous, and Dr. Lighthill's praise is heard on every side Our gratitude to Dr. Lighthill is unbounded and we only hope that other sufferers may be benefited by this publication.

EDWARD TEEL, JR.

A Flattering Testimonial from Colonel John Dietrich, One of Plainfield's Oldest and Best Known Residents.

16 ARLINGTON PLACE,
Plainfield, N. J., July 17, 1894.

I am profoundly grateful to Dr. Lighthill for his speedy and radical cure of a most painful malady of over ten years standing with which I was afflicted.

I deem it proper to say to all afflicted to place themselves under the care of this skilful physician and be permanently cured.

I will cheerfully impart any information I possess when called upon.

JOHN DIETRICH.

Mr. Thomas Callahan of No. 214 Richmond street Cured of a Very Distressing Trouble by Dr. Lighthill.

PLAINFIELD, N. J., June 1, 1894.

TO THE PUBLIC:

For some time past I have been greatly distressed with noises in the head. They were all over my head and troubled me constantly; they were loudest at night when everything was quiet and at such times would often keep me from sleep and disturb my rest. In fact they got to be so bad and distressing that they affected my whole nervous system as well as my health. I did not obtain the least relief until I placed myself under the care of Dr. Lighthill, of No. 132 Crescent avenue, who effected a complete cure in my case in a short time and made me a very happy man.

THOMAS CALLAHAN,
214 Richmond street.

A Card From Mr. T. R VanZandt,

of Nos. 304 and 306 Park ave.,

Plainfield, N. J

I certify with pleasure that Dr. Lighthill has effectually cured me of a most painful case of piles. For some time past I had been subject to its attacks, but the last attack was so exceedingly painful that it completely upset my whole system. The pain extended to my legs and in many other directions, and made me so nervous that I could neither sleep, sit down, lie down or move about without serious discomfort and distress. Such was my condition when I applied to Dr. Lighthill for relief, and I am glad to say that as soon as he took hold of my case, I began to improve, and in a short time found myself completely cured. Dr. Lighthill has also effected a radical and permanent cure in a most terrible case of piles on my cousin, Mr. J. V. Z Griggs, of Rocky Hill, N. J., whose flattering testimonial is in Dr. Lighthill's possession.

Didn't Recognize His Image.

An officer decorated with the Legion of Honor recently entered a waxwork show near Porte-Saint-Denis, and, after looking at the exhibits carefully, addressed himself to the showmen: "You announce on your list Gen. Dodds. Would you kindly point him out to me?" "Why, you have just been looking at him," replied the showman, pointing at a model in a general's uniform. "There's the conqueror of Behanzin." "It's not very like," said the stranger. "Excuse me," rejoined the showman, "it was executed by one of the general's closest friends. You can't have ever seen him." By way of answer the stranger handed his card and the showman read: "Gen. Dodds." —London Globe.

Complimented.

She had married a young naval officer and was so pleased over it that she had gone with him into a little house on a side street and was running it herself.

"Have you any beans?" she inquired of the grocer's clerk during the first week of her incumbency.

"Do you wish navy beans?" he asked politely.

"Oh, certainly," she twittered. "How clever of you to guess we weren't army people."

And the clerk almost choked on the ball of twine he stuck in his mouth to control his emotions.—Detroit Free Press.

METROPOLITAN NOTES.

Interesting Facts and Opinions Chronicled by the Daily Press of New York.

It's a horrible statement, nevertheless true, that while numerous women are only too ready to give their time and energies to teaching the Chinese male, there can hardly be found at the present moment a so-called "charitable" woman who will undertake to teach English to a Chinese female. Just now there is quite a good caste Chinese woman looking for "some Christian American lady who will teach me how to speak English and the Christian doctrine at the same time." The woman came over a month ago to join her husband, who keeps a little prospering Chinese store—tea, lanterns, fans and the rest—in Bleecker street. When a lady from the City Mission went to see her she said that if some good lady would teach her conversation and religion she might even manage to pay a little for the instruction.

Not one conversational or religious lady could be induced to assume the task. One good charitable lady went down with teaching intentions, thinking a man wanted the lessons, but when she found nothing better than a woman she cooled off and thought she "couldn't find the time."—N. Y. Herald.

The pay roll of the city government amounts to more than $12,000,000 a year, or about $1,000,000 a month. The patronage to be disposed of by Mayor Strong on entering on the duties of his office was limited to his own staff, which cost $17,000 a year; the License Bureau attached to the Mayor's office, for which $11,400 is appropriated for employes; the City Record office, which expends $16,100 for employes, and the office of the Commissioners of Accounts, which costs $19,700, making a total of $65,200. But if the Legislature passes the Power of Removal bill, also the bill abolishing the Police Justices and authorizing the appointment of magistrates instead, it will place the entire patronage of eighteen of the principal departments of the city government practically at Mr. Strong's disposal. These departments have an annual pay roll of $1,737,000. The employes of the city number more than 17,000.

Now and then pacing along the walks in Central Park you will see a man not so much heard of now as some years ago, but yet whose name arouses pleasant memories. It is Dr. Robert Collyer, who used sometimes to be called the "Blacksmith Preacher." A venerable figure his is now, though he is still vigorous enough. Not above middle height, but compact of figure, Dr. Collyer strikes you as a man of strength and vigor. His clean shaven face is that of a man of strong intellect and original mind. It is not that of a man who would have to go to another man for ideas. His white hair is worn long, somewhat in the manner that Henry Ward Beecher wore his, and, indeed, Dr. Collyer in a manner recalls the great pastor of Plymouth Church. You do not see Dr. Collyer much in public. Perhaps the best place to see him is in his library, a very simple one, by the way. If you want to hear a man say kindly, helpful things, to express opinions of other men, true enough but never harsh, then you should have half an hour's chat with Robert Collyer. Somehow when I saw him last he reminded me of the Vicar of Wakefield. I verily believe that Goldsmith had such a man in his mind's eye when he drew his delightful character.—N. Y. Advertiser.

Mr. Russell Sage said that it was not true that the Manhattan Railway Company is about to sign a contract with the Westinghouse Electric Company for the equipment of its lines by electricity. He said that he knew that Mr. George Westinghouse had given the matter a great deal of thought, and that he understood that he had nearly perfected a plan which would be offered to the company before very long. "I know I am not a young man," Mr. Sage said, "but I expect to live to see the elevated roads run by electricity; yes, and a double deck road, too, with elevators to carry passengers up and down at the stations, run by the same power."—N. Y. Sun.

One of the satisfactory local matters of the past year was has been the remarkable success of the Provident Loan Society established in May last for loaning money to worthy poor on short time at six per cent. per annum. It has been an institution of benefit to about 17,000 needy people, and it does not seem to have brought any disadvantage to the old-fashioned pawnbrokers who carry on business under the sign of the three gilded balls. But for the new society, organized by a few wealthy citizens, many thousands of people would have been subjected to a severer strain than they suffered under during the hard times of the year.

New York is undoubtedly a busy place, yet it is astonishing to find how many people in it there are with time to watch the ordinary incidents of street life. Business men rushing from commission house to commission house will stop to watch the workmen on the electric subway fixing the rubber rims of the inspection holes. Grave merchants will pause on their way to their offices and watch the mid air ascent of a safe, or the sexton's assistant mowing grass in Trinity churchyard. A car blocade of a few minutes will cause the gathering of an eager crowd of inquirers on both sides of the street; and a boy in a fit will cause a suspension of business until the ambulance carts him off.

The reader of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly on the blood and mucous surface of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer $100 for any case that it fails to cure.

WIDOW GIRTY AND THE STANDARD.

She Sues for $150,000 Given to Hide Her Husband's Crime.

The application of Lawyer Charles T. Wahle to frame issues for a trial before a Jury in the suit of Caroline E. Girty against the Standard Oil Company brought out some unexpected revelations. The plaintiff is the widow of the late George W. Girty who, previous to his death on January 31 last, had been for more than twenty years the cashier of the Standard Oil Company. The suit, as Mr. Wahle explained was to set aside the transfer of $150,000 worth of property made by Mrs. Girty to the company on the ground of duress, fraud, and misrepresentation made by her husband.

On March 19, 1883, when the plaintiff was 62 years old, her husband came to her and told her that he was a thief and had embezzled $364,450.29 from the company. He presented her with a paper to sign, explaining that unless she did so he would be arrested and both of them disgraced. He even threatened to commit suicide unless she carried out his wishes, and also proposed the alternative of ending the whole trouble by dying together.

Finally she signed the paper, but only after her husband had told her that the document was simply to be used as a collateral security, and that it would not deprive her of any right or interest she might have in the property.

Mr. Girty had been employed by the Rockefellers in a confidential capacity for nearly thirty years when he died. He was with them in 1866, when they kept a grocery in Cleveland. At that time, according to Mrs. Girty, the Rockefeller's assets consisted of an old desk, a pine chair, and a yaller dog. Mrs. Girty, inherited money, and increased it by judicious speculation. In 1879 she built a house in Euclid avenue, in Cleveland, which cost $110,000. This property, together with twelve lots in the heart of the city of Cleveland, is what she declares was transferred to the Standard Oil Company under misrepresentation.

Before the conveyance on March 26, '93, the Standard Oil Company began to operate in the German oil market and Mrs. Girty declares that her husband was in with them on several deals, and that they squeezed him and made him a pauper. Girty was considered to be worth $500,000 before that, and he was left with nothing.

Notwithstanding the fact that the Standard Oil Company declared Girty to be a defaulter, they continued to employ him in a position of trust and responsibility to the time of his death, at a salary of $10,000 a year. When he died they gave $1,000 toward the expense of his funeral, and sent a committee of the Board of Directors to Cleveland in a private car to attend the funeral.

Furthermore, the conveyances signed by Mrs. Girty, under the laws of the State of Ohio, should have been acknowledged by the wife separately and apart from her husband. That never was done. The papers were signed and acknowledged by Mrs. Girty in the presence of her husband, and when he left her he took the papers with him.

THE WORKING GIRL.

Miss Sallie Palmer Gives Some Suggestions to Girls About Backache, Faintness, and Dizziness.

[SPECIAL TO OUR LADY READERS.]

Did you ever notice working girls on their way home from stores or factories?

Did you notice how many of them had pale cheeks, dull eyes, and heavy steps? and did you wonder why they were not ruddy and bright?

The story which is told by Miss Sallie Palmer, of Nicetown, Pa., gives the reason for this sad condition of many working girls.

Sometimes their back and sides will ache terribly. They are faint and dizzy with pain and weight in the lower part of their stomach. They watch the clock, and wish that the day would end, as they feel so ill and tired.

Standing all day, week in and week out, they have slowly drifted into woman's great enemy, displacement of the womb. That, or some other derangement of the organ, causes irregularity or suspension of the "monthly periods," bloating, flooding, or nervous prostration.

"Take warning in time," she says; "Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is the surest and safest remedy in the world for you."

SEIZED BY THE REDS

Rough Experience of a French Detective.

Threatened with Death and Forced To Reveal State Secrets—Kicked Into the Street and Warned to Leave London—Will Join the Army in Order To Escape Them.

London, Jan. 10.—The authorities are greatly exercised over an anarchist outrage of an entirely new character which has just come to their notice. An important officer of the French police, in London on a police mission, was seized by anarchists, who carried him off bodily to one of their haunts, where by threats they forced him to reveal such state secrets as he possessed. The developments of the affair are expected to involve diplomatic correspondence.

The details of the affair are as follows:

A young man named Eugene came from Paris last August and made his home in the anarchist quarter. He appeared to be destitute. The anarchists fed him, clothed him and found him employment. Gradually they admitted him to their confidence. He professed their doctrines and often took part in their secret councils. By the end of November he had attended several of their secret meetings. It was then noticed that the Paris police were getting an unusual amount of information as to anarchist proceedings in London. Early in December the anarchist leaders began to suspect Eugene. They were not sure, however, until an important document, addressed to Eugene by Commissary Andre, third brigade of the Paris police, was delivered by mistake to an English anarchist. Twenty-four hours later a special meeting was called. Eugene as usual was invited to be present. The moment he entered the door he was seized and bound. He was kicked, cuffed, spit upon, and, with a revolver at his head and several knives at his breast, was ordered to confess within ten minutes. He acknowledged that he was a trusted police agent known as Colin, Cuvillier and Cottance. In a search of his person a bundle of police documents was found in a secret pocket. One of them was a letter from the Paris prefecture instructing him to watch and report in full the doings of a woman who was about to start from Dieppe for London.

When the detective had answered all the questions the anarchists cared to ask, his captors proposed to kill him. Ultimately he was kicked into the street with the warning that he would be killed if he did not leave London at once. He started at once for Paris and, it is said, will enter the army to protect his life. The London anarchists will send portraits of him to France for circulation among the anarchists of the principal cities.

BEATEN WITH BRASS KNUCKLES.

Insurance Agent McPherson, of Norristown, Pa., Badly Used Up.

Norristown, Pa., Jan. 10.—Samuel V. Newell, of Central City, Col., ex-senator from that state, made an assault last evening with brass knuckles on E. S. McPherson, agent for the Northwestern Life Insurance company, located here. Newell claims that McPherson has been criminally intimate with his wife. McPherson has been corresponding with Mrs. Newell for the past two years. He formerly resided at Central City and was befriended by Newell, who is a well known politician. The latter managed to get hold of several letters and discovered the intimacy that existed between the two.

Newell left Denver on Saturday night with the intention of coming 2,200 miles to give McPherson a severe beating. In this he succeeded. On arriving in Philadelphia he registered at the Colonade hotel under an assumed name and had his moustache dyed. He procured a wig to further disguise himself and arrived in Norristown during the afternoon and proceeded at once to the Trust company's building, where McPherson had his office.

McPherson did not recognize Newell on account of the disguise and was taken by surprise. He was knocked down by a blow on the forehead with the knuckles and was badly used up. Had it not been for Supt. John H. Passmore, of the Traction company, and J. B. Larseelere, who were in the building and went to his assistance, McPherson would have been killed. In the scuffle Newell lost his wig and his identity was revealed. As soon as he could get away McPherson left his office and could not be found.

Newell was taken into custody, but was not locked up. McPherson did not appear against him and he was discharged.

Germany Needs Warships, So Says the Kaiser—Inhumanity Shown to Drowning People—Mme. Joniaux's Trial for Murder at Antwerp—The Gladstones at Cannes.

London, Jan. 10.—A Spanish traveler named Ximinez, who has just returned from a geographical mission through Mesopotamia and Kurdistan, says:

"I was in Armenia from March to November and happened to be in Bitlis during the disturbances in the Sassoun district. It is absolutely false that women and children were outraged and tortured by Turkish troops. The whole thing was grossly exaggerated from an entirely local disturbance, locally suppressed, the troops arriving too late to share in the repression beyond the capture of the supposed instigator. He was a liberated convict named Bohazian, alias Mourah, formerly a pupil in the American Methodist Mission school."

Ximenez exonerates Zekki Pasha, who, on arriving at Moosh, immediately liberated numbers of Armenians and adopted a policy of conciliation throughout. Ximenez says that the Armenian question hardly exists in Armenia.

Buenos Ayres, Jan. 10.—The fire which occurred on board the excursion steamer Terceira, of Nictheroy, in the harbor of Rio de Janeiro, on Monday last, was due to the explosion of an electric motor. Of the 120 said to have been drowned by jumping overboard forty bodies have already been recovered.

It transpires that the ferry boat Quinta, which was passing by the Terceira, refused to help the passengers of the steamer, as the persons on board the ferry boat drew revolvers and compelled the captain of that craft to proceed, fearing that the flames from the excursion steamer would set fire to the ferry boat.

Berlin, Jan. 10.—At the parliamentary reception held by Emperor William at Potsdam last evening, his majesty made a long speech upon naval matters, and pointed out the necessity of increasing the strength of the German fleet. With a map in hand he showed the different naval stations and distant scenes, especially those of the war between China and Japan.

"Pray, afford Prince Bismarck, the founder of our colonial policy," his majesty added, "the satisfaction on his eightieth birthday of seeing voted the necessary sum for the German fleet."

London, Jan. 10.—The Earl of Buckinghamshire, who lately announced in a speech to his tenants his withdrawal from the conservative party and his future adhesion to the principles of the liberal party, has made a statement of his reasons for the step he has taken. His lordship says he has become a liberal because he believes that the reform of the house of lords is the gravest question of the day. The Earl of Buckinghamshire is a descendant of the famous John Hampden.

Berlin, Jan. 10.—A number of anarchists were arrested here. The police searched the book shops kept by socialists and seized a quantity of revolutionary song books and pamphlets.

Antwerp, Jan. 10.—Mme. Henri Joniaux, who is on trial here on the charge of having murdered her brother, sister and uncle in order to obtain the money for which their lives were insured was examined. She indignantly repudiated the charge of poisoning and the suggestion that she had speculated upon the death of her sister. She declared that her object in effecting insurance upon the lives of her brother, sister and uncle was to obtain money to pay a secret debt of honor, amounting to 30,000 francs, that had been revealed to her by her mother on the latter's death bed.

Cannes, Jan. 10.—Mr. and Mrs. Gladstone arrived here to-day. Both are enjoying good health.

WILD RIDE ON A TROLLEY.

Newark Passengers Have an Exciting Time on a Runaway Car.

Newark, Jan. 10.—A trolley car with over sixty passengers broke loose from the motorman in this city yesterday, dashed down the Warren street hill into Market street at breakneck speed. The brakes failed to work. At High street turn there was a sudden lurch, the car titled over on two wheels and half a dozn passengers were flung from the platform to the cobble stones.

The car sped down the steep incline by the court house, the women and children inside shrieking at the top of their lungs. At the Market street switch the runaway car plunged into the rear end of a South Orange avenue car and smashed the platform and shattered the glass in the windows and doors. The passengers were flung in a heap. Several were injured.

Quiet at St. Johns.

St. Johns, N. F., Jan. 9.—The city is quiet. No further disturbance has occurred, although a mob surrounded the court where the arrested rioters were remanded for a further hearing. Upon investigation it is found that only one of the four prisoners is a native of St. Johns, and he is a boy. The others belong to a fishing settlement on Trinity Bay, and are said to be hard characters. They will be severely dealt with, as it is now believed that their original intention was to loot the savings bank.

D., which failed yesterday, is a defaulter, but no one knows either the amount of the defalcation or the method of his crime. Under the statute Taylor should have turned over the cash to his successor Tuesday, but Saturday he wired from New York that he could not get here before late last night. When the train arrived he was not on board, and his bondsmen and friends became convinced that their suspicions were correct—that he had defaulted.

It has been known for some time that he was embarrassed for money. He was caught in the Chemical National bank failure at Chicago for a large amount and lost $20,000 in the bank at Milbank, S. D., as well as $10,000 in that at Gettysburg, S. D., which failed during the panic. Altogether he lost $100,000.

State Examiner Myers said that last April he called on Taylor for a statement of his accounts. The statement gave the names of 15 or 20 banks in which he had deposited money and the examiner received a verification from the banks as to the amounts held by them. If these statements were correct Taylor was all right in April.

In November Mr. Meyers called for a similar report but Taylor after repeated promises to make it did not do so.

Moreover he had been out of the state since some time in November and his precise whereabouts are not known. This circumstance causes great embarrassment to Taylor's friends who say he has taken poor counsel in not facing the music and making a clean statement of the whole matter. There ought now to be in the treasury $50,000 but no one except Taylor knows where the money is deposited and consequently it is impossible to tell what the shortage is.

About the first of this month Taylor was to take up $190,000 of funding warrants. If these warrants were paid the shortage will not be very large, otherwise it will be very heavy.

Taylor's relatives are wealthy and influential. His father, Wm. Taylor, is one of his bondsmen, the others being ex-Gov. Mellette, Speaker Howard of Redfield, and Robert McCoy of Abredeen.

Walter W. Taylor was born in Indianna in 1854, and associated with his father in the wholesale coal business at Lafayette, that state. He came to Dakota in 1886 and established the First National bank of Redfield, which he soon made one of the leading financial institutions of this region. He took an active part in politics from the first.

Later developments show that the defalcation of Treasurer Taylor has not been overestimated. There should have been $370,000 in the treasury. All the funds in sight consist of about $15,000 in the Pierre banks.

December 31 a draft of $35,000 was sent Taylor at New York. Efforts have been made to stop this draft but it is thought to be too late. The Chase National of New York, which holds the warrants, telegraphed they had not been paid and that Taylor has not been seen there for several days.

Advices from Aberdeen are to the effect that Taylor took little money with him but lost it all through his friends whom he helped during the financial panic. When he wanted the money returned his friends were not able to accommodate him. Among the persons whom he loaned money are said to be several state officials and if criminal prosecutions are instituted there will be some sensational developments before the case is ended.

Some time ago Taylor went to New York for the purpose of raising funds to close his account with the state but recent advices are to the effect that he was unable to negotiate a loan and he announced his intention of never returning to Dakota. His friends he bitterly reproached for not coming to his aid in time of need.

In his letter from New York, dated Jan. 6, he says: "I am compelled to inform you that I will not return to Redfield or Pierre. I have counted on friends assisting me in making up my settlement with the state, and felt that it would be done until the last few days. I have no excuse to offer for my condition, although I believe I have many."

Miners Lease Mines.

Columbus, O., Jan. 10.—The miners at Shawnee have leased the Goslyn and Barbour mines, two of the largest in that vicinity, and will oprate them to their full capacity. They will pay a royalty of seven cents per ton on all coal mined and a commission of ten per cent. to the operators for making the sales. They will realize only thirty-five cents per ton, but they will have steady work and will be in a position to punish the Pittsburg operators who broke the differential agreement, reducing mining from sixy-nine to fifty-five cents per ton.

Mines Will Stop Work.

Norway, Mich., Jan. 9.—The Arragon Mining company will suspend work on Saturday for an indefinite period, throwing 300 miners, mostly heads of families, out of employment, with scant prospect of obtaining work again until spring or summer. The company suspends work because it can earn no money under the present royalty paid to the owners in fee of mines.

A Dishonest Odd Fellow Arrested.

Waterbury, Conn., Jan. 10.—Emil Solomon, late financial secretary of John A. Kennedy lodge of Odd Fellows of New York City, who decamped with $600 of the funds of the lodge some time ago and has been imposing upon Odd Fellows in all parts of the country, was arrested here on the charge of vagrancy, pending communication with the parties whom he has defrauded.

[Copyright, 1895, by Bacheller, Johnson & Bacheller.]

There is seldom a lovelier vision vouchsafed to the world of opera than when the young Duchess des Sarazines Beauxlieux entered her box and paused a moment, her great cloak of sables, as it fell, making the whiteness of her shoulders more white. When she turned in her slender stateliness, and bent to return a salutation, her dress of palest primrose satin, threaded with gold, and the sudden blaze of her diamonds, made the more poetical of the spectators think of the young crescent moon in the dark sky, that they had seen down the length of some avenue before they entered.

As for the diamonds she wore, they were simply marvelous—their size, their purity, their depth, their splendor—a collar clasped about her throat, with a sunburst on the breast, and a double fillet in the hair, immense and magnificent stones that seemed to breathe as she breathed, and to shine with a spirit of their own. There were, of course, none like them in the house, and she wore them as if they were a ribbon. "When she comes into her box," the old Chevalier St. Malo said, "I see the stars rise in the sky."

There had been innumerable contes told about those diamonds. They had been in the possession of the Beauxlieux since the time of the Crusades, for all that men knew to the contrary. The Beauxlieux of that day had spoiled the Saracens of them, barbaric and half-cut stones, one legend ran; others said that the Beauxlieux of the time of Charlemagne, who had carried on the futile negotiations for the emperor's marriage to the Byzantine Princess Irene, had been enriched with them before leaving the east. It was certain that they had been recut and many times reset, and it was believed that no woman of all that proud and long-descended race had worn them with the grace and beauty and nonchalance of the present duchess. Tall, supple, her dark skin colorless and clear, her dark eyes like liquid light, her features modeled in ivory, as you might say, the waves of her black hair carved out of ebony, the delicate curve of the red lips opening on a smile that took one captive, it was hardly a wonder that the last duke had married her from her home in the Basses Pyrenees, without a portion.

The duke had gone down to his estates in the islands with a couple of friends for some shooting. At least that was his errand ostensibly. In reality he had crossed the border to meet a representative of the Spanish court in some endeavor to compose the endless quarrels of the hostile kinspeople of the royal families and bring fresh forces to urge upon the hesitating king at home the necessity of strong measures. He was returning, unsuccessful, from his attempt, hoping to make the pass before dark, when his horse went lame just where the road wound below the wall of a single tower, much like the solitary peel-towers of Ireland, set on a shelf of the mountain spur, and looking, in the dim light, as if it might be tenanted by bats and owls or by any company of brigands.

"Juste ciel!" exclaimed the duke. "The last misfortune has arrived to us! And the night coming on in the last quarter of the moon, here in this land of brigandage!"

"I would like better, I confess, to be guest at a little supper with la dame Blandie," said the chevalier. "How goes that, Etienne?"

"You have had little suppers and to spare, chevalier," was the reply. "Hark, what is that?"

It was a voice, a sweet fresh voice from somewhere high in the tower, singing an evening song to the Virgin, a young girl's voice it might be, as soft and clear as the twilight itself here among the hills, and that the echo took and refined away to a very voice of the air.

"Good!" said the duke. "If there are brigands where that voice is, my purse is at their service. Come, is there a gate, a door, a postern, to this enchanted castle?"

And suddenly a wild alarm of baying and bellowing rose; drowning the singing voice, and an old man stood in the gate with his hounds leaping about him, and looked at the riders questioningly. Then bidding the dogs begone, he asked the strangers to ride in to the paved court, dismount and be welcome.

"We are three gentlemen of France," said M. Etienne, "and one of our horses, as you see, has gone lame. Can you give us shelter for a night, and perhaps put us in the way of another mount to-morrow?"

"My house is yours," was the reply. "Take the bridles, Ambroise!" And another old man who followed him closed and barred the gate and led away the horses, while his master threw open the inner door and bade his guests enter.

As the duke glanced at the arms carved above the great door, "It is Baron Rene Vaux," he said, in a low tone to M. Etienne. "He was one of those that went wild over the Corsican. I remember hearing that our friends had stripped him of everything and dismissed him to—"

"Not so, monsieur," said the quick-eared old baron, towering over him. "He dismissed them to—their own masters!"

"A thousand pardons!" said the duke. "All the world knows the distinguished career of Baron Rene Vaux, and that he has only to take his place in the world and give allegiance to the king to have new honors thrust upon him. And none would greet him more eagerly there than his servant, Duke des Sarazines Beauxlieux," with an offer of the hand that the old baron could do no less than accept with as stately an air as it was given.

But the inside of the tower attested the truth of the duke's remark—the bare stone floors, the scant remnant of ancient furnishing, the old armor and the newer swords that were the only ornaments on the walls; and later, when they had rested and refreshed them a little, cleansed of the dust of their long riding, the coarse linen, the worn silver of the table and the simplicity of the repast served by a young woman in a peasant's dress.

"Was it she that we heard sing?" murmured the duke to M. Etienne.

"God forbid!" said M. Etienne. "This Olympe—is it they call her?—is one of the maids of this narrow household. That voice—it was the voice, if you remember, of the enchanted princess!"

"An enchanting voice, at all odds," said the duke.

And at that moment the door opened, and a young girl entered with candles in her hand. She advanced and placed them on the table, and turned and made a reverence to her father and his guests, letting the lids fall over two eyes as black as midnight stars, as soft and lustrous as May moons.

She wore a plain gown of white wool, with a silver girdle, and her long, black hair, plaited in great braids, fell over either shoulder in front nearly to her knees. "Grands Dieux!" murmured the duke again, "Am I back again in the days of my ancestors?"

"The enchanted princess!" he said to M. Etienne, afterward, as they walked up and down the courtyard with their cigars. "And of an enchanting beauty."

There was no animal to be found in the neighborhood next day that exactly suited the duke. And as the old baron made the party welcome, and was indeed very glad of their society in his loneliness, there was still no horse at the end of a week, while the lame one gave symptoms of recovery. The chevalier rode on with their dispatches, Ambroise going with him as far as the safer highways, and M. Etienne remaining with the duke,—the two spending a portion of every day hunting and adding a great store of game to the baron's larder.

There were those who were wont to say that there was a closer tie than appeared even in the remarkable resemblance between the duke and this constant companion of his, and that the duke's father had commended the younger man to the kind offices of his heir. Certainly no one knew anything with exactness of the antecedents of M. Etienne, other than that his education had been of the most complete, that he was a gentleman to the tips of his fingers, that his talents were exceptional, that he could have commanded fame and fortune in his chosen profession of surgery had he not preferred to be simply of the household of the duke. But the fact is, that if there were any bond of a common parentage across a bar sinister—and the resemblance was not so apparent after long acquaintance as at first, for M. Etienne was much the younger—yet neither the duke nor M. Etienne ever spoke of it to each other. But the duke was restless if he long lost sight of M. Etienne; and, as a usual thing, where the one was there always was his shadow.

Time is not very long to young men possessed by a passion; and although no one ever saw the young girl alone, yet the hours when they were not out with the baron and the dogs were endured for the sake of the mornings when she was to be found with Olympe watering her roses in the garden behind the tower, and of the evenings when for a half hour, it might be, she joined them in the hall or on the stone benches of the courtyard round the half-choked fountain. There was something about her that the duke had never observed before. That virgin air of innocence and truth rendered her illimitably remote and sacred. When he saw M. Etienne at last making more bold and walking beside her in the garden, he fancied she was hearing of the glories of the house of Beauxlieux and the excellences of the duke, as he knew M. Etienne sounded them to the old baron.

Somehow the duke could not make the headway here that M. Etienne did. The wall was one not to be broken down as with some other women. He saw there was but one course for him. And his impatience getting the better of caution, of any thought of second nuptials with princely houses and great dots, he made proposals to the astounded and well-pleased baron for his daughter's hand and an immediate marriage.

It was not to be thought that the Baron Rene Vaux, even at the prospect of his own increased loneliness, should hesitate before the offer of such a brilliant future for his only child; and he straightway told her to put herself in readiness, since the matter was arranged. There was no disinclination on his daughter's part; and surely no prettier bridal procession than hers ever wound up the mountain to the chapel, she seated on her gray donkey, around whose neck Olympe had hung a wreath of roses—the chances of lunching presently on which he was calculating with his long ears, M. Etienne leading him and walking by her side, her father and the duke following on foot and Ambroise and Olympe bringing up the rear. As they all stood before the altar, it was with an air of confiding innocence that she turned to M. Etienne. But her father, leaning on his staff just behind, stretched forward his long, gaunt hand and took hers and placed it in the hand of the duke, where it seemed to that gentleman like a melting snowflake. She had thought, until that moment, that it was M. Etienne who was the duke. An accident of introduction, the fact of her ignorance of correct phrases and her habit of using none, and perhaps some natural bias as well, were responsible for the mistake.

But what did it signify to a well-bred and dutiful young girl? Obedient to tradition and discipline, she quietly accepted the duke for her husband. She had no other choice, indeed; and the duke, returning to Paris, took the duchess with him.

And when she had accustomed herself to her fate, beginning with being charmed by the delights of the life her husband gave her, and by the prodigality that contrasted with the simplicity of her poor home, she ended by a sincere affection for the knightly gentleman, and held the house of Sarazines Beauxlieux as something greater than the house of France itself.

And when her son was born she seemed to forget she had any share in him herself, so proud and glad was she over this concentration and completion, this crystallization in one of all the glories of the house of Sarazines Beauxlieux. Only when she saw how black was his hair, hair, how dark his splendid baby loveliness, she had an aching self-remembrance that half the blood in the little princeling was her own, and that somewhere in her own line was a peasant strain to which she owed her beauty. For years she watched the child lest the strain should anywhere appear, and half the teaching that she gave him was concerning the greatness of his ancestry, the mightiness of his inheritance of renown, the grandeur it had given him and the duty he owed it in turn.

So absorbed was she in the magnitude and virtue of her husband's house, that even the downfall of the king gave the young duchess but little concern, since in her estimation there could be no downfall for the Dues des Beauxlieux; and even when, after the many agitations, the new empire was proclaimed she regarded it as all a disturbance that would presently compose itself. For the sake of her father's love of the Corsican, as the duke phrased it, she might herself have looked with favor on the imperial order of things; but it was enough that her husband, loyal to his past, remained a violent partisan of the dethroned king, for her to shut herself up in superb seclusion from the canaille of the new riches and power.

And perhaps by strengthening his arrant contempt for the new people, the duchess herself, and all unwittingly, was in some measure the means of assisting the duke into the obscurity to which he presently found it best to retire.

There had been a grand occasion at the opera, to which the empress had given the exquisite charm and radiance of her presence, and the leaders among the women of the royalist party had urged the duke that the duchess might appear and show "that woman," as they always called her, that queen of farce, what the grande dame really was. And, entirely ignorant of their purpose, the duchess had, of course, assented to her husband's wish.

PARKS WIN.

They Give Their Hoboken Guests a Taste of Hail Columbia.

Last evening's game on the Park alleys between the jolly home team and their competitors, the Columbias of Hoboken, was full of interest from start to finish. Despite the weather a goodly number of enthusiasts gathered at the alleys to root for their favorites.

VanBuren carried off the honors for the Parks, easily rolling up a score of 185 and B. A. Hegeman, Jr., once more donned his fighting clothes, after an enforced absence of several days on account of a severe cold. The dark skinned pinfesers of the Parks seemed to be hoodoo to the Columbias, and the light effected from their ebony countenances appeared to interfere with a clear view of the lower end of the alleys.

The home team were not troubled in the least by presence of the sunburned individuals above mentioned and starting in with a rush at the drop of the flag led throughout the race, winning in a canter by twelve pins. The score:

Christian Endeavor Conferencee.

The Winter Conference of the Plainfield Local Union of Christian Endeavor will take place Monday evening, Jan. 21, in the Trinity Reformed Church. It being the annual meeting of the union, the election of officers will be held, and considerable other business transacted. The president of the New Jersey State Union, Rev. J. Clement French of Newark, will give an address. This announcement is sufficient to attract the Endeavorers throughout the union.

It is expected that the Conference will be of more than ordinary interest and profit, and a full attendance of Endeavorers, and those interested in the work of the society, is desired.

Mgr. Seton's Visit Deferred.

Early last evening Father Murphy received a despatch from Rt. Rev. Mgr. Seton of Jersey City expressing regret at the fact that an attack of the grip would prevent him being present at the Lyceum to lecture on "Milton and His Works", so the entertainment of the evening was postponed, much to the regret of the men and women who, despite the wretched weather, had gathered to greet the eloquent lecturer and listen to his discourse.

Father Murphy trusts he will be able to secure Mgr. Seton soon to entertain and instruct the members of the Lyceum and their friends.

Mirth and Music in the Baggage Check.

The musical farce-comedy, "A Baggage Check", will be produced for the first time in this city in Music Hall Jan. 16 "A Baggage Check" was written by Chas E. Blaney, author of that wonderful success "A Railroad Ticket", which is a guarantee in itself for his new piece. The story of the play deals with the workings of a steam laundry, and gives a splendid opportunity for the introduction of first-class specialties, singing and dancing The company not only comprises some of the best, well known farce-comedy artists, but is also rated one of the best singing companies now traveling.

Hibernian Officers.

County President J. Canty of Elizabeth, assisted by other State officers, installed the officers-elect of the Ancient Order of Hibernians last evening. The officers are:

President—P. Casey.
Vice-President—B. Birmingham.
Recording-Secretary—William Carty.
Financial-Secretary—C. Regan.
Sergeant-at-Arms—W. Casey.

Arrangements were made for the annual ball which takes place in March. It will eclipse all previous events of this kind.

Two Blows for the Gong.

A fire-alarm wire and a Thompson-Houston electric light wire at the corner of Manning avenue and Somerset street came in contact last evening about 7, on account of the high winds, and the result was the burning of the fire-alarm wire, causing it to drop to the ground, thereby sending in two blows which denoted a break. The chief of the fire department was notified of the damage, and had Manager Runyon of the telephone company repair it.

Escaped Police Pistol Balls.

Policemen Hartpence and Flanagan saw a red fox on West Eighth street at 3 a. m., Thursday, and gave chase, each man taking a shot at him, but he escaped. The fox is thought to be the one let loose from Benner's roadhouse last month.

WHY THE BOROUGH WAITS.

Is not Satisfied with Plainfield's Method of Burying Pipes and Providing No Outlet—Tidewater the Only Proper Disposal.

A prominent citizen of the borough engaged in a very interesting conversation last evening in regard to the sewer question which is being considered at this time.

He said: "If the borough needs a sewer, which is conceded, she is perfectly able to have one, and does not require the assistance of Plainfield, and we object to Mayor Gilbert and Councilman Frost showing us how to put one in and what system to use.

"I would like to ask two questions: First, Why Mayor Gilbert has suddenly become so solicitious of the borough's welfare; second, If Councilman Frost knows of any community or locality where 14 000 feet of sewer pipe is laid and in operation, without an outlet.

"Mr. Frost tells us to go to Framingham; but why not go to East Orange, which is nearer?

"At the latter place, the intermittent filtration system was tried and proved so faulty that they were obliged to discard the system.

"In one column of a recent issue of another Plainfield paper the statement was made that unless the borough adopted sewers, no one would live in the community; in another column the statement was made that there were n't houses enough in the borough to accommodate those wishing to live here.

"When God made this country he provided for a natural drainage, and he knew as much about this important question as does Mr. Frost. That drainage is towards the Raritan river, and the first cost in securing an outlet to that place is all the cost.

"There is any number of towns in the State using the stream for their sewers, and why should n't Plainfield?

"If the Mayor or Sewer Committee anticipate any trouble in adopting this method, let them run their pipe below the dam at Bound Brook to tidewater, and that would settle the matter permanently.

"If Plainfield would do this, North Plainfield would be more than pleased to join the trunk line in the vicinity of Grant avenue.

"When Nellie Bly went to Pullman last Summer for the New York World, at the time of the strike, she asked the question, as they were nearing the city, What that horrible stench was, and was told it was the sewer beds.

"Since that time Pullman has thrown away the system Plainfield wants to adopt, and is now emptying into the Calumet lake.

"Now if those who are engineering the system for Plainfield think they have such a good thing, let them develop it and prove it, then the borough may join with them. Till then, we are satisfied to wait and profit by the experience of others."

A Natural-Born Musician.

The night was filled with music in the office of The Daily Press when Edward Martin, the alert janitor of the North Avenue station, dropped in with his guitar and favored the staff with songs to his own accompaniment. So good was the music that people came flocking in like the children at the heels of the Pied Piper of Hamlin, and all complimented Mr. Martin highly on his musical genius. Mr. Martin has the happy faculty of grasping a tune at first hearing, and there is no musical instrument beyond his power.

Press News Goes Everywhere.

Not only in Plainfield but universally is The Daily Press regarded as the oracle of this section. Even Town Topics, the bright and shining journal of society, comes to The Press for matter of interest to the people of the metropolis and the country, and in its current issue quotes from The Daily Press report of the masquerade ball in the Casino. Town Topics has a good eye.

'Twas Ever Thus with Press Ads.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE DAILY PRESS:—Please discontinue notice "Want of Girl". We are swamped. Had to hire a boy to answer the door bell. With thanks.

C. H. S.

His Name's Not Newcorn.

Justice Mosher was much amused to learn last evening that the cases of Kane and Sheridan were tried by him yesterday morning as stated in another paper.

All these remedies are guaranteed to do just what is claimed for them and the dealer whose name is attached herewith will be glad to tell you more of them. Sold at L. W. Randolph's drug store.

RELIC OF OLD TIMES.

Interesting Memories Revived by an Old Paper Owned in Plainfield.

George W. Houseman is the fortunate possessor of a timeworn copy of the New York Daily Advertiser bearing date July 4, 1799 The paper is a single sheet, almost wholly given over to advertisements, and by its perusal the reader learns of several valuable Negroes which will be sold at remarkably low figures; the presentation at the theatres of special patriotic plays appropriate to the day, and introducing busts of "the great Washington"; and the fact that a leading merchant on Liberty street has on hand 20 butts of Brown's stout, a constant supply of dipt and mould candles, soap, and hair powder by the box. There is also published a proclamation by the then President, John Adams, removing the restrictions of a former act of Congress "to suspend commerce with France and the dependencies thereof", and a letter from the great Lord Nelson in which he refers to the sword about to be presented to him by the city of London and writes "but I prefer to leave that" (the special engraving on the sword) "to the better judgment of my fellow citizens". Several "intercepted letters from the army of Bonaparte" dated "Alexandria" are translated for the public, and two columns are devoted to the list of unclaimed letters remaining in the postoffice. A Mr. Little of Broad street "flatters himself" that his hotel is the best in the city, and Capt. J. W. Patterson of the Twelfth Regiment offers the enormous sum of $10 reward for the arrest of one Edmund Gibbs, a deserter who "is supposed to be gone into Connecticut". As a relic of a bygone age the paper is of great value to its present owner, who intends having it framed for its better preservation.

BIG FURNITURE HOUSE BURNED.

Jordan & Moriarty's Park Row Building Completely Destroyed.

The five-story brick buildings 209, 211 and 213 Park Row, New York, and the three-story frame building 207, adjoining, all occupied by Jordan & Moriarty as a furniture and carpet warehouse, were gutted by fire this morning. Through the good work of the fire department the flames were prevented from spreading to Cowperthwait's building next door, and the tenements in the rear.

President Patterson, of the Board of Fire Underwriters, estimates Jordan & Moriarty's loss at $50,000; Cowperthwait's loss, owing to damage by water, $5 000. and the damage to the buildings themselves is roughly estimated at $10,000.

HIGH SCHOOL NOTEBOOK.

An address by Theodore Roosevelt on "The Duties of an American Citizen" formed the subject for Mr. Maxson's regular Friday morning talk. At the close of Mr. Maxson's address he spoke of the excellence of the course of lectures to be delivered here by Mr. Vincent and announced that special tickets would be sold to members of the public schools for 50 cents instead of $1 for the course, and all those who sold five regular tickets would receive a ticket for themselves.

Quite a number of new suggestions for High School colors have been received and the interest in the choice is growing rapidly. Light blue and black is the most popular of the new selections.

The final examination in Civil Government was taken by the Fourth class this morning. The study of Physiology will be taken up in a few weeks.

Seven girls of the Senior class contributed 3 cents each to an envelope contribution and sent it to the nightingale of the class urging that it be used in clipping the plumage of the bird. The barber evidently profited quickly, for this morning each girl of the class got a cute little box with a lock of hair tied with blue ribbon.

Fanwood Hackmen Protected.

A stage with a sign reading "Plainfield and South Plainfield" pulled up at the Fanwood station yesterday morning and its driver promptly began soliciting patronage. There was a big shoot at Benner's and the stage driver was evidently in it for the dust. His soliciting on the station platform being contrary to rules of the Railroad Company, he was promptly called down by the local hackmen who comply with the rules and complaint made to Judge Moore. Special Officer Corsa was telegraphed for and arrived on the 12:13 train. The nuisance was abated.

—Superintendent McClurg, of the Plainfield Electric Light Company, in order to give perfect satisfaction and steady lights, is putting in a improved damper regulator for the boiler, which will keep the steam at a steady presure at all times.

Carlton Cornwell, foreman of the Gazette, Middletown, N. J., believes that Chamberlain's Cough Remedy should be in every home. He used it for a cold and it effected a speedy cure. He says: "It is indeed a grand remedy, I can recommend to all. I have also seen it used for whooping cough with the best results." 25 and 50c bottles for sale at Reynolds's Pharmacy, Park and North avenues. T. S. Armstrong, manager.

MET HIS BENEFACTOR.

A Horse-Trade Trouble Revived After Many Years.

William J. Nelson of this city, who is serving as one of the petit jurors for the present term of Union County Court, related a little instance last evening that is worth publishing. In 1860 Mr. Nelson resided with his parents on a farm in Piscataway township, midway between this city and New Brunswick. His brother, John Nelson, had settled in Sussex County on a farm, and was becoming successful as a stock raiser. William J., while on a visit to his brother, had with him a small pony, a good looker, and a fine animal. A man named Lee, who was acting as agent for a farmer named Jeroloman, took a liking to the animal, and insisted on trading a fine mare for the pony. A deal was made, and Mr. Nelson received $25 to to boot, besides becoming the owner of a fast roadster.

Mr. Nelson returned home, and a few weeks afterwards was surprised to hear from his brother that a suit had been begun against him for the return of the mare.

In the meantime, Mr. Nelson had sold the mare. His brother had written to be on hand on a certain day in Stanhope, and informed him also that he had engaged a young lawyer from Newton to defend him. Mr. Nelson was on hand, and his lawyer won the case for him.

In the Court of Common Pleas, Tuesday, the name of Thomas McCarter was read off by the clerk of the Court, as one of the lawyers to defend a suit against a corporation; and Mr. Nelson, who had never seen since the lawyer who so successfully defended him 35 years ago, immediately recognized in Mr. McCarter that person.

After the Court had adjourned, Mr. Nelson met Mr. McCarter and asked him if he rembered the suit at Stanhope early in the '60's. Mr. McCarter shook hands with Mr. Nelson and vividly related all the little details of the case, and told him that he had left Sussex County in 1863 and had since lived in Newark.

SALVATION ANNIVERSARY

The Plainfield Branch of the Army Has an Enjoyable Celebration.

The fourth anniversary of the foundation of the local branch of the Salvation Army was celebrated last evening at the Second street barracks, a large delegation being present from neighboring cities. The visitors included Brigadier General Evans, commanding the Central Division of the Army, which comprises 83 corps in New Jersey and southern New York; Ensign Damon, the celebrated boy preacher, now of New York but formerly of the Boston army; Capt. Taylor, the California minstrel; Capt. Mimms of Jersey City; Capt. Watkins and several of his corps from Bound Brook; Adjutant Wood, Capt. Marsh, Lieut. McDonald, formerly of the Plainfield corps, but now of Peekskill; and Capt. March, who was also at one time located here, but is now with the army at Morristown.

There was a very good attendance, considering the storm, and much interest was manifested by the audience throughout the evening. Several interesting addresses were made by the visiting officers and at frequent intervals the Central Division Quartette, which consists of Ensign Damon, Adjutant Wood, and Captains Taylor and Marsh, sang beautiful selections which were well received by the audience. Captain Taylor the "California Silver Minstrel", who owes his restoration to manhood, from a drunkard's life, to the good work of the army, sang two beautiful solos, accompanying himself on the guitar. Captain Watkins also rendered solos in a sweet voice.

The meeting of tonight which is the last one of the jubilee will be attended by nearly all the visiting officers who were present and others are expected. A much larger audience will doubtless be present.

The banquet of yesterday afternoon from 4 to 7:30 was a very enjoyable occasion and was participated in by many friends as well as members of the Army.

Reducing Expenses.

Fourteen trainmen in the employ of the Jersey Central were laid off yesterday, and as a result a number of former conductors are now baggage masters, baggage masters have in some instances been made brakemen, and brakemen have been given a vacation. An experiment is being tried of having but one brakeman on some of the local trains.

If Horses Could Talk.

A horse driven by Cabman Dick Mead fell on Third street near Plainfield avenue, about 8:30 last evening, and the harness had to be removed before the animal could regain his feet. Whether or not the horse was exhausted from the beating it had previously received on North avenue, the horse of course could not say.

—Mrs. S. Whittemore, one of God's precious workers in the slums of New York city, will speak in Reform Hall tomorrow evening at 8, and in Music Hall Sunday afternoon at 4:15.

GIVEN A SHEEPSKIN.

Presentation and Installation at Franklin Council.

The newly-elected officers of Franklin Council, No. 41, J. O. U. A. M., were installed last evening by District Deputy Charles I. Young.

Previous to the ceremonies, Councilor H. C. McVoy on behalf of the Council presented Mr. Young with a very handsome sheepskin apron which he will wear in his official capacity as district deputy. He thanked the members in a few words for the way in which they appreciated his work.

As is customary the new Councilor after being installed is to present the retiring Past Councilor with an emblem of honor which was presented to Harvey R. Thorn, and received by him with a few chosen remarks.

Fred Leland has given up his position as an agent for the Prudential Insurance Company, and engaged in business with his father, G. H. Fairchild fills the vacancy with the company.

Mr. and Mrs. William Stillman sailed for Bermuda yesterday, and will remain until Jan. 26. It is hoped that Mr. Stillman, who has been for sometime a sufferer from the grip, will be much benefited by the change.

Much sympathy is expressed for Thos. Clarke, the faithful organ blower of the Crescent Avenue Church, in the loss of his wife, who died this morning after a three-weeks illness. She was a devoted wife and a devout Christian, and in Christian resignation the husband bows to his bereavement. Decedent leaves a daughter, Mrs. Charles W. Fisher, and other children.

A Beauty at Large.

The large snow-white rat which for several months has been the pet of the local Western Union Telegraph office, was on dress parade yesterday, much to the amusement of Plainfield's Past Master of the Key, and his young assistants. An effort will be made to capture the pretty pink-eyed fellow and place him in a cage where he may be seen more often than at present.

The press seems to work very satisfactorily, and the electric motor does the work finely, with no perceptible effort, although the press is new and runs heavy.

—The coal bin has a great habit of getting empty, and the next time you need to refill it try M. Powers & Son, whose quality of fuel is not the only merit, quantity also being generous, and the screening of the coal is carefully looked after, while the delivery is prompt and in every way satisfactory.

—Marshall P. Wilder will appear in Music Hall next Tuesday evening, Jan. 15. Those who have enjoyed Mr. Wilder's entertainments do not need to be reminded of the pure quality and delicacy of his humor, but we would say to those who have not heard him, that his impersonations, while being of the most mirth-provoking description, are exceptionally refined.

—Henry Frisble, referring to the dispute about Charles Ulrich's horse, says that Mr. Ulrich was told by Sam Tayner, the pound-keeper, in Blimm's Hotel, that he had the horse in the pound, and that it was taken there by the boy who used to work for Valentine. Mr. Frisble says that had Mr. Ulrich come to him and told him that the horse was in the pound he would have got it out at his own expense. But since he has permitted the costs to accumulate he will have nothing more to do with it.

Oil Spells Bowling.

A team of Plainfield bowlers went to Finderne last evening to roll a game with the Casinos of that place. They were beaten by the Finderne boys, the score being 1269 to 1261, which they claim was due to the wretched condition of the alleys. They were oiled the day before and were not thoroughly dry.

SNOW, RAIN AND FLOOD

Freight Train Buried Under an Avalanche.

Connecticut's Coast Ravaged by the Storm — Many Vessels in Peril — West Virginia Towns Inundated — Ice in the Rivers Breaking Up and Causing Much Damage.

Williamsport, Pa., Jan. 11.—Traffic on the Fall Brook railroad is completely paralyzed by snow slides in the mountain regions of Pine Creek. In one instance an entire freight train was buried out of sight by an avalanche that came sweeping with irresistible fury down the steep declivity, and the crew escaped injury as if by a miracle. Great rocks and tons of earth came down with the snow and the tracks are buried at points many feet deep. Between Blackwelss's and Cammal, for a distance of fifteen miles the track is almost entirely covered, and hundreds of laborers are working night and day in the effort to open the road. The buried freight train consisted of 17 cars and it had just halted owing to a slide in front, when another avalanche came and overwhelmed it. Two other freight trains are stalled between slides. The officials cannot give any assurance as to when the road will be opened, as an immense amount of work is involved.

New London, Conn., Jan. 11.—A fierce northeast gale prevailed here last night, accompanied by rain. Tugs G. M. Winslow, Dudley Pray, Mercury, Storm King and Herald are all in here with tows, unable to goet eastward. The last two came in late in the afternoon, reporting that on the Seane the gale was terrific and a tremendous sea running. The Winslow, Pray and Mercury have been here three days unable to get to eastward. A big four master ran into the lower harbor for a safe anchorage where she rode out the storm. No vessels left port, fearing to run into the approaching storm, which was much more severe outside than in the harbor.

Parkersburg, W. Va., Jan. 11.—The flood situation here is alarming. The Ohio river is 36 feet 6 inches and rising slowly. Riverside, Lauckport, and Southside are partly overflowed and the mills and factories have been compelled too close. News from up the Little Kanawha is of the most alarming nature. Elizabeth reports ten feet and Grantsville eighteen feet, both raining and rising. From Glenville heavy snow and rain are reported to have put the river out of banks and still rising. It is expected that forty foot mark will be reached to-day.

Harrisburg, Pa., Jan. 11.—The ice in the river has broken up and the water has since risen considerably, but no damage has been reported.

MANY APPLICANTS.

Congressmen Who Want To Be Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

Washington, Jan. 11.—The president will within a short time appoint an assistant commissioner of Indian affairs to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of Assistant Commissioner Armstrong.

There are about twenty-two applicants for the position. Several congressmen whose terms of office will expire at the close of the 53d session of congress are talked of in connection with the position. Prominent among them are Representatives Enloe of Tennessee, and Baldwin of Minnesota. Others mentioned are ex-Governor Swineburne of Alaska, and Indian Inspector Smith. The chances of the latter appear to be very good for securing the appointment owing to his knowledge and experience of Indian matters.

Could Not Stand the Grip.

Providence, R. I., Jan. 11.—Cyrus Armstrong, who has been secretary of the Roger Williams Savings Fund & Loan association for some twelve years, was found dead in bed at Hotel Arlington, having taken laudanum and opium. Deceased's accounts are not known to be out of the way, but an investigation is in progress.

Attempts To Burn a Town.

Perry, Okla., Jan. 11.—There is excitement at Stillwater the county seat of Payne county, 25 miles from here over attempts for two nights to burn the town. The town has been strongly guarded for two nights, and several attempts to apply fire have been thwarted.

TORONTO'S BIG FIRE.

Loss Estimated at $1,000,000—A Woman Terribly Injured.

Toronto, Ont., Jan. 11.—The fire which started at 7 o'clock last night in the Osgoodby building on Malanda street was in close proximity to the ruins of S. F. McKinnon & Co., where the disastrous fire of last Sunday burned itself out. The Osgoodby building was soon entirely destroyed. The flames spread west and southwest to Wellington street and in less than an hour burned out the following places:

R. H. Gray & Co., furnishing goods; Breton & Manning, furs; Thomas Dunnett & Co., furs; E. Boisseau & Co., clothing; Robert Darlington & Co., wholesale woolens. The last named building was very high and the hose reached only half way up to the top floor and the firemen were almost powerless. The fire then crossed Wellington street to Hunter, Rose & Co., printers and wholesale booksellers; Hart & Riddell, wholesale stationers, and Buntin, Read & Co., paper manufacturers, where it was gotten under control.

When the fire started in the Osgoodby building the janitor, his wife and daughter, the wife prostrate from the effects of last Sunday's fire, were confined in a room on the top flat. The fire escape could not be reached in time and all three had to be slid down a wire rope, clad in their night clothes. The sick woman slid part way down and then fell, turning a somersault, striking on the telegraph wires and finally landed in a blanket held out for her. She was terribly injured. The men came down without injury. The loss is estimated at a million of dollars.

RUNAWAY LOCOMOTIVE.

One Man Killed and Another Fatally Injured.

Scranton, Pa., Jan. 11.—A runaway locomotive on the culm dump of the Archibald colliery in Keiser valley, near this city, yesterday afternoon wrecked a portion of the breaker building, killed Assistant Foreman Theodore Hale and perhaps fatally injured Wm. Morgan. Engineer Harry May's presence of mind saved him from a fearful ride to what would have been certain death. May had been shifting culm cars on the level surface of the dump which spread out over many acres nearly on a level with the head house of the breaker, fully 150 feet above the adjacent ground.

The rails were slippery from sleet which fell all morning and while coming towards the head of the plane the engine got beyond May's control. The grade there was slight but in a moment the engine had slipped to the very brink of the steep plane. An instant more and it was passing over the head and May, no longer able to control it, jumped and saved his life, although he rolled nearly half way down the side of the culm pile. The engine dashed down the plane with fearful speed, crashing into and demolishing a part of the breaker building in which Hale and Morgan were at work. The men were taken out of the ruins with bruised bodies and broken limbs and conveyed to their homes. Hale died within two hours, and Morgan's recovery is not expected. Both are young men.

THE WAR IN THE EAST.

Reported Battle in Mongolia—Japanese Soldiers Suffering.

London, Jan. 11.—A dispatch from Shanghai says that severe fighting has taken place near Jehol, Mongolia, 120 miles northeast of Pekin. Hundreds of wounded Chinese are reported to be arriving at Tien-Tsin daily.

Yokohama, Jan. 11.—It is rumored here that 1,000 men belonging to the first army of Japan, operating in China, have been incapacitated from duty by the cold weather.

Gen. Nodzu telegraphs from Shugan, under date of Jan. 8, that the enemy facing the third division of the Japanese army in the west has retreated to Kokan. The advance guard of the enemy near Liao-Yang has advanced to Kansenho with two pieces of artillery. The rest of the Chinese force is quartered a few miles northeast of Hai-Ching.

Want To Be Pardoned.

Albany, Jan. 11.—Gov. Morton has received the first appeals for executive clemency made since he resumed office. They were those of Lurence Prior and Robert Warren, of New York, serving terms in Sing Sing prison, the former having been convicted last year of abduction and sentenced to three years, and the latter serving a term of two years and six months under conviction in June, 1893, for bigamy.

Shot Himself.

Chester, Pa., Jan. 11.—In making an investigation into the death of the young stranger who jumped from an express train near Moore's station, Coroner Quinby discovered that he had been shot through the head the bullet piercing the right temple. A revolver was found on the road. The man had evidently shot himself and fell from the train.

THE CURRENCY ENIGMA

Some Schemes Suggested To Solve It.

Senate Committee on Finance Discuss the Situation Without Conclusions—Time Wasted in Bandying Questions—Will Meet Again To-Morrow Morning.

Washington, Jan. 11.—The senate committee on finance discussed the financial situation for three quarters of an hour without coming to any conclusion regarding the currency question. The democrats failed to suggest any tangible proposition and the republicans declined to commit themselves to any policy. As one member of the committee expressed it, the time was consumed in bandying questions back and forth between members. Before the committee adjourned to meet to-morrow at 10 o'clock each member was cautioned to say nothing about what transpired in the room and there appeared to be a general disposition to maintain a strict silence.

Various suggestions of a tentative character were advanced, but in no instance did those charged with responsibility put forward a single proposition as one upon which they would likely agree. The republicans when urged to suggest some means for the solution of the problem talked tariff and refrained from accepting the invitation. Taken altogether the meeting was unsatisfactory and when it became apparent that no headway could be made it was agreed that nothing further should be done until to-morrow when Mr. Vest will submit a bill which he hopes will include the ideas favored by his side of the chamber. It is probable that other members may also come prepared in like manner.

Enough was gathered from the discussion to learn that the silver senators would under no circumstance vote for an issue of bonds that did not carry with it an arrangement that cared for silver in the most substantial manner. All of these senators agreed that the only thing in that direction that would be satisfactory was the unlimited coinage of silver. Its free coinage they might waive, under proper conditions. Mr. Vest at the same time declared his friendship for silver and stated to his colleagues that he would vote for an issue of bonds sufficient to refund the greenbacks and the treasury notes issued under the Sherman act provided there were coupled with it a thorough recognition of silver worded in a fashion that would remove the discretionary power of the secretary of the treasury. It is not unlikely that either Mr. Vest or some other democrat on the committee will prepare a bill somewhat on the lines of the suggestions of Wharton Barker of Philadelphia, during the struggle for the repeal of the purchasing clause of the Sherman act. Under that proposition bonds were to be issued at a low rate of interest and the government was to coin the silver, retaining the difference between the bullion and the mine vaule, paying for the bullion at the market price in standard silver dollars.

It is understood that Mr. Aldrich or some other republican will submit to the committee at the meeting a bill restoring the reciprocity arrangements in force under the McKinley act as a substitute to any financial measure that may be brought forth. There are indications that the republican leaders are not anxious for an extra session of congress and would prefer, if they can do so consistently, to aid some scheme that would dispose of the pending trouble during the summer months and leave its final settlement for the new congress that will convene in regular session next December. If their aid is given to any proposition it must be along republican lines, and they reinforce their arguments in this matter by the statement that democrats might as well accept it now as to be compelled to do so either in extra session or during the next congress.

The meeting to-morrw, will in all probability, be profitless, for members of the committee of both parties agree in saying that nothing was accomplished to indicate any change in the sentiment of the members as to what should be done or to encourage the belief that anything at all will be done.

ALTGELD'S MESSAGE.

Recent Labor Troubles Discussed by the Governor.

Springfield, Ill., Jan. 11.—Gov. Altgeld sent his message to the legislature yesterday. In the course of it he discusses the recent labor troubles at length.

Beginning with a general discussion of the labor problem he takes up in turn the coal miner's strike at Spring Valley, the railroad strike, the issuance of injunctions by federal courts, the sending of United States troops into Illinois, and concludes with the declaration that these conditions, if not arrested, will change the character of our government and give us in time a corrupt oligarchy, the worst form of government known to man.

Concessions To Employes.

New York, Jan. 11.—President Uhlmann, of the Brooklyn Elevated railroad, announces that the company has decided to make certain concessions to their employees. The principal one, Mr. Uhlmann said, was an increase in the firemen's wages of ten cents a day. The other grievances which the men requested him to consider are still undecided.

Washington, Jan. 11.—The inspection board has reported the cruiser San Francisco now at Newport ready for a three years' foreign cruise and sailing orders have been sent her to leave as soon as possible for the European station where she is to displace the Chicago as flagship.

Large Collar Factory Destroyed.

TORTURED THIRTY YEARS.

His Suffering Ended After Using Munyon's Rheumatism Cure.

Mr. George Smith, of Tacony, Pa., says: "I suffered from rheumatism for 30 years, and had so many severe attacks that some of my joints were twisted out of shape. At times I suffered terrible pain, and, although I tried many remedies, I never obtained any permanent relief until I procured Munyon's Rheumatism Cure. The action of this remedy was wonderfully quick, and although I have only taken a small quantity, I consider myself permanently cured."

Munyon's Rheumatism Cure is guaranteed to cure rheumatism in any part of the body. Acute or muscular rheumatism cured in from one to five days. It never fails to cure sharp, shooting pains in the arms, legs, sides, back or breast, or soreness in any part of the body in from one to three hours. TALMAGE'S CHURCH.

A THEATRE WEEK DAYS, CHURCH SUNDAYS.

The Doctor Tells How He Came to Decide on New York as His Future Field. He Considerately Holds Services at Four o'clock.

The Rev. Dr. T. De Witt Talmage bids adieu to the pulpit in the City of Churches. Henceforth he will preach the Gospel from the stage of the building so lately occupied by the members of the Black Crook company, whose risque dancing and other approaches to naughtiness startled and attracted the most blase of New York's men about town.

While Dr. Talmage will have the stage of the Academy of Music for his platform, he means to have the entire world for his audience by means of the newspaper syndicate, which will publish his sermons. It is not his intention, he says to preach strict Presbyterian doctrine, but rather to give the Gospel to the public in a broad and liberal treatment. A group of his personal friends will contribute the necessary financial backing, and have guarranteed that his new venture will be permanent. Who those friends are, or what salary he will receive, he refuses to tell at present. The fact, however, that he has been in receipt of a salary of $12,000 a year and an allowance for house rent while conducting the Tabernacle in Brooklyn is an indication that his present retaining fee as a Gospel expounder is by no means a small one. What the precise amount is he will not disclose at present, contenting himself with the statement that all these minutiae will come out later. It suffices for the present for the public to understand that we have the Academy of Music for as long a period as we desire."

"My work is over in Brooklyn," said Dr. Talmage. "The departure of my third church and the necessity for building a fourth church if I remained decided me.

"A syndicate of gentlemen in England had been formed, and were anxious that I should conduct a church over there. Not less than nine churches in the United States were anxious to secure me for their pulpits, but I never allowed any of these overtures to go beyond the preliminary correspondence.

"My work henceforth will be in New York and it will be permanent there. The afternoon hour in some respects is a better hour for religious services. I would prefer to hold the services either in the morning or evening, but selected the afternoon in compliance with the wishes of many pastors who did not wish me to interfere with their services.

"I propose to give an independent religious service, a service which will be undenominational and which will not attach itself to any special form. It will be a Christian service. There is room enough in the Presbyterian Church for a man to preach the full gospel of pardon and sympathy and life. A sympathetic gospel is what the world wants and that is the gospel which should be preached.

REV. DR. TALMAGE.

Still a Presbyterian could preach the Gospel in the Methodist or the Baptist or in any of the great evangelical churches. I care nothing for technicalities, and I have always preached the Gospel as I found it. There are certain great theories in religion on which all Christian people agree. My chief work in the ministry is yet to be done. I never felt so vigorous as I do now.

"I have more sermons in my head, unborn sermons, than I ever preached. I shall be more free than I have ever been, because I will not have to spend my energy in building churches. New York is a great centre of influence, and I know its people. I have not decided whether I will in my sermons consider politics from a religious standpoint. In the ministry a man must get his instructions from headquarters.

"The place in which I preach is not of so much importance, because the audience which confronts me is as nothing to the people I actually address. The newspaper syndicates print my sermons and have been doing so for years. My late friend Grady, of the Atlanta Constitution, once told me that he believed that 10,000,000 people were readers of my sermons each week. Since then other newspaper syndicates have sprung up and the number of sermons published has correspondingly increased. I do not think I overestimate the matter when I say that there are not less than 15,000,000 readers of my sermons each Sunday. The number of readers of these sermons, of course, is out of all proportion to any congregation I could address with my voice. I have not missed sending out a sermon any one week in the last 24 years. I keep my vast audience through the kindness of my newspaper friends, who are always willing to publish my sermons. The newspapers may be credited with bringing about a complete change in Christian work. Only a few years ago the secular newspaper did not touch religious topics; now there is more information of a religious character published in the secular journals than goes through the religious journals. The result is that the people do not put aside one portion of their life for religion and another for secularity."

Just 126 members of the scattered flock of the Brooklyn Tabernacle met recently in the Centennial Baptist Church to take their bearings and decide on their future as a church organization.

There is still an indebtedness of $40,000 or more resting on the church, without any available funds to meet it. In this is included $8,470 in bonds, $5,000 to Dr. Talmage for money advanced in a crisis in the building of the last church, $7,500 to various small creditors, and $20,000 or more to contractor Wells, who built the Tabernacle. On a formal vote there was a small majority in favor of dissolution.

BARROOMS IN NORWAY.

Observations of the Workings of What Is Known as the Gothenburg System.

Dr. Moxom explained the Gothenburg or Norwegian system in detail, giving as its vital principle that the State shall make the liquor business an absolute monopoly, and put it into the control of responsible men, whose motive is to reduce, instead of increase, the per capita consumption.

The effect is also to reduce the number of saloons to a marked degree. The profits accrue not to the company, but to the people, in the shape of public institutions, amusement halls, etc.

"I saw something of the workings of the system in Sweden and Norway," said Dr. Moxom.

"I visited more saloons last summer than I had seen before in my life. I examined the liquors carefully, found out what kinds were sold, and how many glasses a man can buy.

"In Bergen there are in the neighborhood of a dozen places where liquor is sold by the glass or bottle. Each is a plain room, perfectly clean, without even a picture on the wall. There is not even a chair in the room, except a stool behidd the counter for the official in charge. He is a respectable man, probably a member of the church.

"On the walls are printed the rules of the company, which all must obey. If a man asks for aqua vita he lays down his coin—there is no credit—and pure, undrugged spirit is poured out for him. He is not allowed to remain in the room, and if he wants another glass he is told to come back in three hours. The glass is so small that he might take a glass every three hours in the day and not get drunk. A workingman cannot take a nip on his way to work, for the saloons do not open till eight, nor at noon, for the saloons close from 12 to 1:30 o'clock. The day before a holiday they close at noon, and they are closed before the workingmen are paid off.

"No man can make a cent from the business. The man behind the counter is employed for his personal character. He gets a fairly good salary, but not a cent from the business. If he deviates from the rules of the company he is bounced at once. He is promoted for making as small sales as possible. The policy of the whole system is to crowd down the consumption of alcohol. In 1876 the per capita consumption was 5.8 quarts; in 1892 it was reduced to 3.3 quarts. Norway and Sweden were the most drunken countries in Europe. Now Norway is three times as sober as the United States.

"It is the exact reverse of a license system, under which the licensed dealers stimulate trade as much as possible in order to get back the money they have paid for their licenses. I think it would be better to have free whiskey than such licenses as we have in American cities. The difference between that and this is as great as the difference between day and night. The Norwegian system eliminates politics entirely. It has been argued that it makes drunkenness respectable, but its effect has been to elevate the public spirit, and array it against drunkenness.

"The system has been recognized as working against the monster drink, and it has become less respectable to patronize a saloon."—Springfield Republican.

THE FAULT OF THE AVERAGE WOMAN.

A List to Aid in the Self Examination of Conscience.

Women gossip. This is a fact, and it has no bearing upon the subject, to say that their gossiping is mild and harmless compared with men's. It is true that women's gossip springs from an intense, though somewhat misdirected interest in their fellow-beings. The fact remains that they gossip. Every woman who feels that this fault is hers should resolve to make an earnest effort to overcome it. She will not be particularly interesting as a companion when she refuses to hear and tell choice anecdotes about her friends, but she will have the infinite satisfaction of knowing she is pursuing the higher life.

Woman, as a class, is careless about time. She will come into an office and prattle an hour and a half about her servant, her baby, or her complexion lotion to busy women, whose time is money. She will make appointments and feel distinctly aggrieved because the persons with whom she makes them object to waiting forty minutes for her. She misses trains and cars, keeps hostesses in a state of wild unrest, causes cooks to give warning, and men to peril their souls by profanity, all because she finds it so difficult to acquire a proper regard for time.

She is thoroughly illogical. She will be incomparably gracious and charming to a man and will describe her conduct as polite. If another woman assumes the same attitude that woman is a dangerous coquette. If the man presumes upon her graciousness she is ice. If he is not misled by it she is very likely to consider him a person of no sensibility. If he claims that she has encouraged him to care for her she is annoyed and regards him with contempt, as a person unable to maintain his self control. If he does maintain it and does not openly succumb to her charms, she is annoyed and regards him with suspicion, as a person incapable of feeling.

She has a horrible fondness for shoping and a foolish dislike of harmless, necessary mice. She loves bargains and wastes much time and much brain tissue in order to save a little money on a yard of silk. She has an inconsequent habit of skipping the important news in the papers and confining her attention to personal gossip. She does not eat enough sensible food and she eats too much stuff which is not good for her. She likes excitement and hates dullness. And she has not yet come to see that excitement is wearing and dullness is the common unavoidable lot. When her desire for excitement leads her to champion causes begin crusades and adopt missions, many other faults are added unto those she already possesses. But then she ceases to be the average woman.

No Apparent Reason.

DOYLE HAS HIS SAY.

LIKES PHILADELPHIA BECAUSE IT'S SOMEWHAT ENGLISH, YOU KNOW.

Goes Slumming in Detroit, and thinks American Blue Coats too Autocratic. His Blood Boiled at the Revelation Before the Lexow Commitee. Other Views.

Dr. A. Conan Doyle, the English novelist, has come and gone. Upon the eve of his departure Dr. Doyle said to a reporter: "I have traveled as far west as Chicago and as far south as Washington. The city which pleased me most was Philadelphia. I notice that the Philadelphians are given to athletic sports of all kinds, and I see the result in the physique and general build and character of the men I met there. I think Philadelphia savors more of an English city than any other city in America, and perhaps that accounts for my being more pleased with it than with other cities I have visited.

"In every city I have visited," Dr. Doyle continued, "the citizens all talk about their police, and I will frankly state that I find the policemen much rougher than any I have ever met with in European countries. They seem to be given a despotic power that the foreigner would not submit to for a moment. I met only the police of Detroit, and went on a 'slumming' expedition in that city, guided by the police.

"I did not attend any of the sessions of your Lexow Committee investigations," the speaker added, "but I have read all of the testimony in the newspapers, and the evidence of official corruption has made my blood boil. I can not understand why the people have not risen and crushed the police force out of existence. It seems to me almost incredible that such a condition of bribery and blackmail should exist in a civilized country without a popular uprising. In England such a condition of affairs could never reach the magnitude it has assumed here.

"I am greatly pleased with the transportation facilities in this country. I think that in the matter of railroads England will compare favorably with America, still we have no such service as that rendered by the Penusylvania limited. Your Pullman cars were a disappointment to me. We use them abroad, but we understand how to heat them, and apparently your railroad managers do not. To ride in a Pullman car for 24 hours in this country is the hardest work I have done since I arrived. Your tramways in the cities are serviceable, but in your elevated railroads I found something to delight me. The easy, comfortable cars, high speed and general comfort of the elevated trains, is something I shall always remember.

"I have been met most cordially by the people of this country, and shall carry many pleasurable recollections of my visit. Your women are charming and your men are easy to get acquainted with. The men are not surrounded with that palisade of coldness that one meets with on the other side. In fact, it takes but a short time to become acquainted, and I already know more persons in this country after my nine weeks' stay than I would meet and know in a year on the other side of the ocean.

"As to the social evil, of which there is so much talk in the newspapers, I can safely say that vice in this country is not to be compared with vice in England. In England it is flagrant and open, and one meets with it everywhere, but in New York and in this country generally if you want to find vice you have to go and look for it.

"I find a certain philosophical resignation about the American which astonishes me," Dr. Doyle continued. "Your tramways deliberately tear up the streets of your cities, leave huge trenches for citizens to ride or drive into; the companies run their tramways to suit themselves and the public calmly looks on and bears the annoyance. In England, should the tramway corporations attempt to ride roughshod over the public, one man would cry out and the cry would be heard in three hours from London to Liverpool."

Dr. Doyle said that he was not pleased with the American bar, referring to the saloon. He said that in England all drinking was done at tables, but here one had to stand up to a bar and drink, pay and get out. There was no comfort in the American custom.

He spoke in praise of our buildings and dwelt upon their height and handsome architecture. The Brooklyn Bridge, he said, would dwell long in his memory as the finest bridge he had ever seen. The American hotels, he said, would compare favorably with the European hostleries, but the hotels in provincial towns were what interested him most. He said that, while the hotels in London and other cities might be as elegant as those in the large cities here, the hotels in the smaller towns could not be compared with those in America.

MONEY LOANED.

Local Representatives Wanted.

Our system affords an opportunity to borrow on either personal or real estate security. The plan is superior to building and loan associations. The amount borrowed may be returned in monthly payments without bonus, with interest at 5 per cent. per annum, it affords absolute security to investors with a reasonable guarantee of an annual dividend of from 8 to 10 per cent. We desire to secure the services of energetic, representative men in every community to act as local secretaries. The position will be sufficiently remunerative to amply compensate for services. If you possess the above qualification write for particulars. Full information regarding our system of making loans as well as investments and agencies will be furnished by addressing S. S. FOR PLAINFIELD'S PROGRESS.

The Dreaded Alabama In Battle.

On Jan. 11, 1863, the Alabama won her first honors in battle with a United States ship of war. Commander Semmes had laid his course for Galveston in the expectation of destroying a fleet of Union transports rumored to lie there, but instead his lookout reported five vessels of war lying off the harbor. They were enforcing the blockade, as Semmes soon discovered, and not caring to fight under the circumstances he hauled away, pursued by the Hatteras, an ironclad gunboat constructed from a river steamer. The Alabama apparently ran from her antagonist a distance of 20 miles. Meanwhile night closed in, with no other vessel in sight. Semmes beat to quarters, prepared for action and wheeled to meet his pursuer.

Captain Blake of the Hatteras was first to hail. Receiving the answer that the stranger was the British steamer Petrel, he at the same time announced his own vessel, stating that he would send off a boat. Suddenly a speaking trumpet was heard on board the alleged British Petrel calling out, "This is the Confederate steamer Alabama!" The announcement was followed by a broadside from the cruiser; but, sudden as it was, it found the Hatteras ready, her ports open and the men at the guns. The vessels were sailing in the same direction, about half a mile apart. Returning the Alabama's fire, the Hatteras steamed ahead, a movement imitated by the enemy, so that the two continued on a parallel course, pouring full volleys into each other.

Captain Blake knew that his ship was the weaker of the two in her hull and steamed for the Alabama, hoping to end the fight by boarding the cruiser. He got within 30 yards of her, where pistol and musket shots were exchanged between those stationed on the tops, but the Alabama sheered off, planting at the same time two shells in the hold of the Hatteras and setting her on fire in two places. Another shell soon pierced the steam cylinder of the Hatteras and disabled her steering gear and pumps. The walking beam had been shot away and her iron plating torn off at the water line, causing a bad leak. Notwithstanding his plight, Captain Blake continued to fight until the Alabama stood off the bow of the Hatteras, out of reach of her guns. Finding that the vessel was rapidly sinking, he fired a signal of distress and ordered the magazine flooded to prevent an explosion. The crew then put off in boats, and two minutes later the Hatteras went down.

The Alabama was the superior vessel both in guns and speed. She was also built for war, as the Hatteras was not, and all her machinery lay below water line. The only casualty on board of her was one man wounded. On the Hatteras two seamen were killed and five wounded. GEORGE L. KILMER.

The Plainfield Republican organ has developed an excessive fondness for Councilman Frazee, and is bubbling over with love for Councilman Westphal. What designs the organ has upon them, it is not within the province of The Daily Press to say, but it is wise to remember that those for whom around the ides of November it was vaunting a profound friendship are now the subject of its bitterest persecution.

Under the autocratic dictatorship assumed by the Plainfield Republican organ over the Plainfield Republican officeholders, no Councilman has a right to go down town for a yeastcake without first asking the organ by telephone if he must wear sandals or rubber boots, and no Councilman's wife may make a neighborly call without sending for the spectacled inspector to tell her if her hat is straight. The self-appointed monitor of the town is going to be consulted in these matters or give objectors to his scrutiny no peace of mind.

What has Councilman See done to the editor of the Republican organ? Time was when Councilman See was one of the gods worshiped by the Republican-organ editor in his prayers for the City Clerkship, but now not even the President's committee appointments suit the hyphenated paper. Can it be possible that Mr. See committed the grave mistake of not consulting the editor of his party organ before arranging his list? The party organ wants it distinctly understood that if it is going to be ignored in this fashion by the paltry office-holders it won't play—so there!

Action was recently taken by a Plainfield society on a matter of public importance, and The Daily Press gladly published the result as a piece of news and because it was of benefit to people. When the matter was taken to the office of another paper, a charge of $2 was asked. "Why,"—was the astonished reply—"The Daily Press printed it for nothing." Whereupon the contemporary replied: "The Daily Press ain't in the business for the stuff; they do things for love." This distinction The Press is glad to accept, even when so inelegantly expressed. If there is one thing above all others that The Press values, it is the esteem and affection of its fellow-men, and, to reverse a familiar Scriptural quotation, where the people's heart is there will the treasure be also.

There are two ways of getting news. The best is to get it yourself, and that is the method of The Daily Press. Those who can't get it themselves take it from The Daily Press. Using The Press to keep them posted is the sensible method adopted by most Plainfield people. It has likewise been used by other papers at home and abroad. Among the news items recently copied a day late from The Daily Press of the day preceding, was one concerning the Plainfield postal carriers. To the news of the item the copying paper added some remarks which were unjust to the faithful messengers. The paper was visited, and its authority asked for.

"That's all right"—was the answer. "We know where we got it, and we know where The Daily Press got it. Make them tell first."

Such refreshing incidents as this are of daily occurrence in the office of the discerning contemporary which so gratifyingly recognizes The Press as the fountain-head of Plainfield news, and if The Press had time to compile them in book form they would afford a volume of most engaging humor for sufferers in search of a lively nerve tonic.

The Press has hitherto believed that the majority of the people of Plainfield voted the Republican ticket as a matter of belief and principle, and that they felt in honor bound thus to support the party to which they had given allegiance. But if the editorial expressions of their own organ are to be believed, the Plainfield Republicans are Republicans because of what there is in it. The editor of that organ has continually bewailed the fact that in the distribution of official patronage Plainfield is neglected. He even went so far in the campaign of the Fall of '94 as to warn the rest of the district that Plainfield had claims which must be recognized or Plainfield would revolt. And now he fumes because in the awarding of State-House "snaps" Plainfield "got only a little $300 doorkeeper position", while editors whom he specifies were "rewarded" in various cities of the State. Strange as it may seem in view of all the impressions the Plainfield Republican organ has given to the contrary, The Daily Press believes that Plainfield Republicanism is loftier-minded than to work as zealously as it does for Republican success merely for the sake of getting political pap in return. Indeed, there are those who incline to the belief that the ring-organ editor is disappointed in not being among the Republican organ editors of the State whose partisan fealty was so extraordinarily rewarded in the distribution of Legislative appointments. This may be unjust—The Press hopes it is; but it will take a deal of explaining on the part of the organ editor to relieve himself of the suspicion.

By a practical illustration right at our doors we are reminded of the copybook adage "Silence is golden", and the Scriptural injunction to let our communications be Yea Yea and Nay Nay. The case is that of The Silent Man, who is thus immortalized by The Saunterer in Town Topics:

"There died at Rahway last week a character almost unique and entirely admirable. His name was Theophilus Page. He was a graduate of Williams College, sold newspapers for a living, and lived with apparent satisfaction to himself and no harm to anybody else for ninety years. He earned for himself in the last fifty years of his life one of the noblest of human titles, The Silent Man. Though his business brought him daily among his townsmen he confined his conversation to Yes and No. His memory should be honored by all that appreciate the importance of silence. Theophilus Page was a silent reproach to the eternal, inconsequential, babbling and brabbling of this age. About every American stands on the street-corner or in front of a bar and yawps. Talk, talk, talk! morning, noon and night, until there is a ringing in the ears of earth and headache in the heavens. Let us consider the ways of Theophilus Page, and shut up and be wise. I daresay that he might have been a greater orator than Webster, a greater writer than Marrion Wilcox, or a greater inventor than Joseph Pulitzer. He had no time to talk about it. He only had ninety years, and he needed them all to think in and to enjoy himself in. So he lived and died with his mouth shut, to my mind one of the greatest men in history and greater than any other American that ever lived. I would especially commend his habits and career to the Rev. Dr. Charles H. Parkhurst."

The Basket Not Included.

A gentleman of large means, in a Scottish county, had a hothouse vinery celebrated for its choice produce. When the queen was on one of her periodical journeys through Scotland, the royal train was timed to stop for luncheon at a well-known through station in this county, and Mr. Childers availed himself of the opportunity to send her majesty an offering of his best grapes. In due course a letter of acknowledgment expressing the royal appreciation of the gift, and complimenting the donor on the fineness of the fruit reached him; and, feeling sure his head gardener would be greatly interested in the contents of the letter, Mr. Childers read it to him. The gardener gravely listened, but his only comment was: "She disna say onying aboot sending back the basket."—San Francisco Arganaut.

REMOVAL.

Dr. Lighthill begs leave to give notice that he has removed to

(a few doors from his former location) where he can be consulted on all chronic diseases of whatever name and nature.

Dr. Lichthill refers with pardonable pride to the success of his practice in Plainfield and submits below a few of the many testimonials which he has received from grateful patients. A mass of similar ones can be seen at his office.

AN ALMOST MIRACULOUS CURE.

The Statement of Mr. Edward Teel, Jr., of Bunellen, N. J.

TO THE PUBLIC:

From a sense of duty I desire to call public attention to the almost miraculous cure which Dr. Lighthill effected in the case of my wife. For eleven years she had been afflicted with piles of an unusual severe and distressing character. She suffered every day of her life the most intense pain, attended with frequent and profuse hemorrhage. This state of things debilitated her entire system until she became a perfect wreck of her former self.

We made every effort to obtain a cure but they all resulted in bitter disappointment, although a number of physicians of excellent reputations for skill in that direction had treated her case. She grew worse and worse all the time, the pain became perfectly unbearable and I felt she could not bear the strain of her condition much longer. In this extremity, a friend of mine, Mr. W. E. Dilts, a resident of Roselle, N. J., a passenger conductor on the New Jersey Central told me that he had been similarly affected, and had been permanently cured by Dr. Lighthill, after other medical skill had failed. He assured me that the doctor would cure my wife, no matter how severe her case may be, and his prediction proved perfectly correct. In spite of her desperate condition, Dr. Lighthill, I am glad to say, has effected a complete and perfect cure in her case, and has given her new life.

Since the cure has been effected she has gained in health and strength and is so improved in appearance that her friends scarcely recognize her. They all consider her cure as almost miraculous, and Dr. Lighthill's praise is heard on every side. Our gratitude to Dr. Lighthill is unbounded and we only hope that other sufferers may be benefited by this publication.

EDWARD TEEL, JR.

A Flattering Testimonial from Colonel John Dietrich, One of Plainfield's Oldest and Best Known Residents.

16 ARLINGTON PLACE,
Plainfield, N. J., July 17, 1894.

I am profoundly grateful to Dr. Lighthill for his speedy and radical cure of a most painful malady of over ten years standing with which I was afflicted.

I deem it proper to say to all afflicted to place themselves under the care of this skilful physician and be permanently cured.

I will cheerfully impart any information I possess when called upon.

JOHN DIETRICH.

Mr. Thomas Callahan of No. 214 Richmond street Cured of a Very Distressing Trouble by Dr. Lighthill.

PLAINFIELD, N. J., June 1, 1894.

TO THE PUBLIC:

For some time past I have been greatly distressed with noises in the head. They were all over my head and troubled me constantly; they were loudest at night when everything was quiet and at such times would often keep me from sleep and disturb my rest. In fact they got to be so bad and distressing that they affected my whole nervous system as well as my health. I did not obtain the least relief until I placed myself under the care of Dr. Lighthill, of No. 132 Crescent avenue, who effected a complete cure in my case in a short time and made me a very happy man.

THOMAS CALLAHAN,
214 Richmond street.

A Card From Mr. T. R VanZandt,
of Nos. 304 and 306 Park ave.,
Plainfield, N. J

I certify with pleasure that Dr. Lighthill has effectually cured me of a most painful case of piles. For some time past I had been subject to its attacks, but the last attack was so exceedingly painful that it completely upset my whole system. The pain extended to my legs and in many other directions, and made me so nervous that I could neither sleep, sit down, lie down or move about without serious discomfort and distress. Such was my condition when I applied to Dr. Lighthill for relief, and I am glad to say that as soon as he took hold of my case, I began to improve, and in a short time found myself completely cured. Dr. Lighthill has also effected a radical and permanent cure in a most terrible case of piles on my cousin, Mr. J. V. Z. Griggs, of Rocky Hill, N. J., whose flattering testimonial is in Dr. Lighthill's possession.

THE MEN TO BLAME.

'TIS THE LORDS WHO ENCOURAGE TO LAVISH DISPLAY.

Humanity Seeks to Clothe Itself After the Fashion of the Class Above It. Women Dress to Indicate Their Husbands' Financial Standing. Modesty Defined.

That ever sensible writer, Mrs. Amelia E. Barr, thus discourses in the New York World:

Dress has deeper signification than mere mode; it is, in fact, the outward and visible reign of that harmony which always subsists between man and his artificial covering.

The scant, square, graceless clothes of the Egyptians were as characteristic as their obelisks and pyramids. The loose, ample robes of the Asiatic, the homeliness of Saxon fashions, the picturesque taste of the Stuarts, the hundred different styles which fashion has tried on the women of the last two centuries, have a far deeper meaning than mere personal pride or vanity. They touch religious, social and even political aspects, and are the mirror of their periods.

The world is growing rich and we are passing from the old to the new, because making money is slowly altering all our opinions. Hardly any one is now content with "the station in which it has pleased God to place them," and they disdain all the signs peculiar to it. Servants wear sham silks and jewels and clerks dress like their employers, and the first thought of every one who makes money is to live and to clothe himself as the class above him lives and dresses.

The philippics against the extravagance of the fashionable woman's dress, coming as they usually do from fashionable men, seem rather funny. For no doubt the tailors' and the dressmakers' bills of any couple in that particular set keep up a very fair average. And if a wife did not dress up to her husband's extravagances, if her dress was laughed at, then she would compel her husband to compare her unfavorably with other women, and what wife would willingly contribute to that comparison? Men compel women to dress up to the last bow and color—they like extravagantly dressed women to illustrate themselves with! Yes, they do!

Their talk is indeed of the home virtues, and they affect to long after good, sensible girls, industrious and patient, whose hearts are in their knitting and sewing and cooking duties, but as a matter of fact they leave such women to the solitary enjoyment of their virtues. Their innocence would bore them; and the majority of fashionable men would rather parade themselves with a woman whose dress began much too late and ended much too early than with the most virtuous of her sex if she was without style or behind the fashions.

Dress also is now a token of financial standing. We have no titles to measure rank, and the dress of a man's wife and daughters is the insignia of the class to which they belong. They cannot pin the certified amount of his bank balance across their breast, but they can indicate it by their expensive trimmings and jewelry; and so long as wealth is our social standard, dress seems to be a very satisfactory token of it.

What is modesty? "It is the tact put before all our perceptions, the instinct which resents whatever is forbidden, the blind discernment, the mute indicator of whatever should be avoided or not known. It is an indescribable fear connected with our sensibility; a marvellous veil between our mind and our eyes; a feeling so positive and yet so delicate that it will hardly bear to be named."

Indelicacy of dress is bad indeed, if it implies a corresponding indelicacy of mind; but this in the case of our present evening gowns is beyond likelihood or supposition. It is thinking makes whatever is either good or evil, and girls to whom very low-necked dresses are everyday affairs attach no moral importance to them.

The truth is that if low dresses were an evil they would long ago have disappeared. But men like and encourage them; they complain of high sleeves, of big hats, of long skirts, etc., but they never complain of low dresses, and the assurance of moralists that they do not marry the sooner for this display of beauty is not warranted by the facts. And if it were, it is offering modesty of appearance a bribe; for if women are to dress modestly, because it pays matrimonially, the reason is in itself more immodest than the dress complained of.

There is an immodest tendency, however, in the dress of women of the present day which cannot be too strongly deprecated—the attempt more and more to assimilate women's dress to that of men. Smoking cigarettes; frequenting risky places; talking doubtfully or slangy, naturally follow this assimilation.

There is no question that to a certain extent the costume of a woman is a type of modesty and that it has a restraining influence upon her manners. Thus, a man can get over a wall, or climb a tree, but a woman has to think of her skirts, and this kind of compelled self-restraint is a strong adjunct to modesty and good manners. Some complaint also might justly be made concerning the bathing toilets of the last decade, for they have gradually dwindled away to a smock, a waistband and a frill—and tights!

Now there may be no intentional seduction in such a toilet, but the appearance of evil is to be avoided, and before international vice there always comes that sort of bravado which makes light of safeguards and so prepares for disaster. For contempt of forms is quickly followed by looseness of manners, and many a woman not naturally vicious is lost on this dangerous road. This may be considered a truism, but it is a truth old as the hills, and, new or old, it is most worthy of constant recognition.

Washington on Wheels.

An illustration of reversion to type may be witnessed in Washington. The miles of asphalt streets rightfully win for the capital the name of the Wheelman's City, and man, woman and child avail themselves of the bicycle. District messenger boys have bicycles, which they manage with the ease and dexterity a Wild West cowboy shows in riding his broncho. What impresses the visitor is the sight of one of these blue-suited Mercurys astride of his wheel pedaling his way along Pennsylvania avenue hands off, contentedly perusing a copy of some work of yellow covered literature.

TO ROUGE MAY BE A DUTY.

The Point of View from Which a Frank Woman Viewed Colorless Cheeks.

She was a woman perhaps 30 years old, with pretty, soft hair, eyes of no especial color and pink cheeks; in fact, a woman entirely fascinating in manner and appearance. Suddenly she stopped reading and put the book down.

"You will not like this story," she exclaimed. "It's all about a plain woman who made herself beautiful. She did a great many wonderful things to her face, and in her method was included a little judicious rouging."

The speaker was looking in the faces of the other women as she spoke, and the expected look of disapproval appeared in every face. Then she said: "You don't think she was justified in rouging, or that it is ever excusable in any woman?"

"It is repulsive," said a matron of forty-five, embroidering very fast and speaking very decidedly, "and I cannot see how there can be two sides to the question."

"I do not agree with you," answered the young woman who began the discussion. "I am going to tell you a secret now—I do it myself!"

"Horror!" cried three or four voices at once.

"I have always had an idea that your color was not natural," said the matron of forty-five, disapprovingly.

"Now that does not annoy me in the least. I am not at all ashamed of it. You see," continued the young woman who rouged, "it was all a mistake, my being created with nice enough hair, good but colorless eyes and a skin that I must say is faultless in texture, and then to have it all spoiled by a fatal sallowness. It was not artistic. I think if nature makes a mistake we should make an effort to remedy that mistake.

"You, my dear," she said sweetly to the young girl who had called the process of rouging "uncleanly," "it is your misfortune to have hair that does not curl. In your case nature's mistake is very prettily remedied, I must admit," observing the fluffy waves in the hair of the rather discomforted maiden.

"Now, I," went on the champion of color, "do not have to use curling tongs. My hair behaves itself. But the blood that belongs in my cheek does not behave itself, and so I make an effort to do without it."

"Does your husband know that you rouge?" asked the demure maiden.

"Soon after we were married, he found it out, and one morning," she went on, with a contented little laugh, "when I came down to breakfast he looked up from his newspaper and said: 'Janet, you will oblige me by going up stairs and washing that stuff off your face.' 'Certainly,' I said, and I washed off my beautifier and reappeared before my good husband. Again he looked up from his paper. 'Go and put it on again,' he said, crossly. 'Certainly,' I said, and we have never mentioned the subject since. I assure you, it is very exciting to know that people, men especially, are looking at you very closely, and trying to make up their minds whether the color is natural or not. Just because vulgar women plaster their faces with rouge, that is no reason why the whole thing should be called an abomination. The use of strong perfumes is disgusting, but we should not on that account be obliged to refrain from putting orris and sweet scented sachets in our clothes presses. Moreover, I am pleased with myself when I look well, and one cannot be charming unless one is pleased with one's self. With my rouge on I can be sparkling and clever, without it I am as dull as my skin is. It is like the consciousness of being well gowned."

SECRET OF THE MANGO TRICK.

A French Scientist Discovers How the Yoghis Work Their Greatest Wonder.

A French scientist, M. Ragonneau, has just discovered how to make a plant grow from a seed in thirty minutes as much as it would under ordinary circumstances in as many days. Heretofore nature has shared this secret with the Yoghis of India alone, and the methods pursued by these clever magicians in performing this trick have often been described. They plant a seed in the earth and cover it with a cloth. In a few moments the cloth begins to be pushed upward by the growing plant, which in a short time attains the height of several feet. Various theories have been advanced as to the modus operandi of this miracle, one of the latest being that the spectators are all hypnotized by the magician.

During his travels in India M. Ragonneau saw this trick performed frequently and noticed that the Hindoos always imbedded the seed in soil which they brought with them especially for the purpose. At last he learned that they obtained this earth from ant hills. Now as every one knows who has inadvertently eaten one of these industrious insects, ants contain a large proportion of formic acid, with which in time the soil of their habitations become charged. This acid has the power of quickly dissolving the integument surrounding a seed and of greatly stimulating the growth of the germ within.

After a little experimenting with this acid the learned Frenchman was able to duplicate perfectly the Hindoo trick. His further researches have led him to believe that this discovery may be profitably applied to agriculture. By infusing ants in boiling water acid as strong as vinegar can be obtained. M. Ragonneau has achieved the best results and most perfect growth by using earth moistened with a solution of 5,000 parts of water and one of acid.

Figuring It Out.

The journey was long, and the old lady with the plaid shawl thought to beguile the time by a conversation with the tailor-made girl who sat with her.

"Live in the city?" asked the old lady.

"Yes. Work there," answered the girl, and said nothing more.

"Might I ask what you work at?"

"Figures."

This seemed discouraging, but the old lady plucked up her nerve and asked:

"Figures! Livin' picters, or bookkeepin'?"—Washington Evening Star.

NO LICENSE FOR BOCK.

The Somerset Court Unanimously Decides Against the Application.

North Plainfield was well represented in Court in Somerville today, by those interested in the fate of Charles Bock's application for license to open his new hotel on Somerset street.

Judge Bartine stated that a remonstrance had been received from the Borough Council, and a petition with 70 signers, and he and his associates were unanimously agreed to refuse the application.

Alvah Clark, counsel for Bock, demanded that decision be withheld and a date be set for a hearing. This was refused. He then asked for a rule to show cause why a re-hearing should not be granted.

The Court said it was useless to talk, as the Court had made up its mind and saw no necessity for another bar room in North Plainfield.

Still, it would admit the rule, and set next Friday as the date for hearing Mr. Clark's arguments.

The reader of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly on the blood and mucous surface of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer $100 for any case that it fails to cure.

THE LATEST AIR SHIP.

Professor Langley's Flight of 900 Feet Beats the Record.

Wings have been used for aeroplane flight during several hundred years, as shown by the elaborate researches of Mr. Chanute, and this characteristic can be observed in the various minor successes wherein many decidedly successful short flights have been made with flapping wings. The rigid wing flights have not, however, been so numerous, and for more than half a century it has been an open question as to whether a rigid wing aeroplane could be managed in the air with a motor. It was generally believed that anything with fixed planes propelled by a motor would promptly become unmanageable. Professor Langley's aeroplane is, however, practically rigid so far as flapping wings is concerned.

Langley's machine makes its start from Chespeake Bay in the face of the wind. All such machines are assisted by the sustaining force of an opposing breeze. It was launched from a workshop on a scow, and it was so made that it could not injure itself by alighting on water, upon which it is especially built to enable it to float, and to be rescued by a rowboat in attendance. The principal material used in its construction is aluminum. Since the wings are rigid, its motion through the air, propelled by rapidly revolving screws, is like that of a kite. The wings are not meant to enhance the motion, but are to be used for guidance by means of slight deflections of surface. A very slight change in the slant of the wings will produce a decided change in the direction of any kite aeroplane, as shown by my own experience during hundreds of kite aeroplane ascensions, as well as in the twenty-five years devoted to sailing flight, without a motor, by Lilienthal.

Langley's machine is twelve feet in length and eight feet wide, measured across the front wings. A rear pair of wings is about half the size of the front pair. The wings consist of light frames over which is stretched fine white cloth. Another remarkable feature is that the aluminum body weighs only two pounds. The body alone is about four feet long by two feet wide, and if the machine were placed within a circle it would just about fill it. Its vertical rudder, like that of a ship, causes movements to right or left, while its wings, by their adjustment, cause ascending and descending movements. The propelling power, steam, is generated in a little copper boiler and engine attached to wooden screws within the aluminum body. The propeller blades, attached to the screws, are very thin, and, though only a foot in length, they exert an enormous proportional thrust, owing to the tremendous rapidity of their revolution.

On December 13, 1894, this marvellous little machine made a motor flight of about 900 feet clear, thus beating all records. The record for motor flying machines now stands: A. M. Herring, New York, 300 feet, with an oil motor, in 1891; Hiram S. Maxim, Bexley, England, 220 feet, with a gasoline motor, and three men on board, on July 31, 1894; Lawrence Hargrave, Stanwell Park, N. S. W., made 368 feet in 1894 by means of a motor in which the heat was supplied by spirits of wine; Professor S. P. Langley's machine made 900 feet, with a steam motor, near Quantico, Va., on December 13, 1894. The tremendous import of this success will perhaps be realized better by the people of the twentieth century.

Her Idea of Wealth.

"My idea of great wealth," said the observing girl, "is having money enough to buy candy by the box instead of by the bagfull.

"It just makes me angry," she went on, "to go into a confectioner's store and say, 'Please give me 15 cents' worth of those chocolates,' motioning towards three or four different kinds, you know, and then hear the girl ask, in that superior way that some girls have, if I meant 15 cents worth of each. Of course I have to answer: 'Oh, no! I want 15 cents' worth of them all—mixed.' It makes me feel so small that I want to raise up on my toes and flaunt a $20 bill and say: 'I guess you may do me up a three-pound box of your 80-cent candy.'"—Chicago Record.

No Choice.

"So Scadsby, our cashier, is dead—whom will we have to succeed him?" The millionaire banker looked gravely at the business manager as he spoke.

"We have small choice," replied the business manager. "William and Robert have been filling the post alternately. Robert, as you know, is wild. He drinks, gambles, and leads a fast life. William, on the other hand, is steady and reliable—never drinks, does not play cards, and is a worker in the church."

"Yes; as you say, there is no choice. Notify Robert to assume permanently the duties and the salary of our late cashier," and the great financier assumed his reading of the morning paper.—Puck.

How Men Choose Wives.

One is really sometimes led to wonder what men really do desire and expect of the other sex. Man admires helplessness and declares it ruins him, decries frivolity and shuns intellectuality, is forever lauding his mother, who made such unapproachable pies, and yet continues to marry a pair of white hands that cannot do anything of the kind. He moans over weakness and ridicules strength—though a good deal less than he did a generation ago. He condemns fashion in unsparing terms theoretically and the lack of it practically, longs for a sensible woman and passes her by when he meets her, despises pink and white dolls and marries them if he is permitted. Talk of the inconsistency of women, forsooth!

The House Putting Bills Through with a Rush.

Hawaiian Correspondence Referred to the Foreign Affairs Committee—Work in the Senate—Skirmish Over Urgent Deficiency Bill Items—Mr. Harris Reinstated as President.

Washington, Jan. 11.—The house made a record in the matter of transacting business yesterday that compares favorably with that of any previous day for a long time. The Hawaiian correspondence made public Wednesday, was laid before the house and referred to the committee on foreign affairs for report, upon the recommendation of the president that the request of the Hawaiian government to be permitted to lease Neckar island to a British submarine cable company be favorably acted upon by congress.

Saturday the 2d of February, was set apart for the delivery of eulogies upon the life and services of the late Senator Alfred H. Colquitt, of Georgia.

A resolution was agreed to asking the secretary of the interior to tell congress why the agreement with the Kickapoo Indians for the cession of their lands in Oklahoma, made in 1891, and ratified by congress in 1893, had not been carried into effect.

The following bills were passed:

House bill to define the crimes of murder in the first and second degrees, manslaughter, mutiny and desertion, and to abolish penalty for certain other crimes.

House bill authorizing the erection of life range lights and fog signals on the Kennebec river, Maine, to cost $17,000.

Senate bill to amend the shipping laws so as to abolish the requirement of bonds for the registry of vessels.

Senate bill granting an American registry to the steamer Empress.

House bill authorizing collectors of customs to add to the certificates of inspection of American vessels, the gross and net tonnage as ascertained in conformity with the laws and practices of foreign countries with which the vessels trade.

Thirteen private pension bills were also passed.

Mr. Springer (dem., Ill.) endeavored to secure the passage by unanimous consent of the senate bill granting a pension of $100 a month to Major General John A. McClernand of Illinois, but Mr. Strong (rep., O.) objected.

Most of the afternoon was spent in consideration of the District of Columbia appropriation bill for the year ending June 30, 1896, the last of the general appropriation bills on the calendar. It carries a total of $5,190,187.97, besides $201,219.28, on account of the water department.

Senate Proceedings.

A preliminary skirmish over the items in the urgent deficiency bill, appropriating $211,800 for 303 additional deputy collectors of internal revenue, and $18,000 for 10 additional revenue agents, in connection with the enforcement of the income tax, took place in the senate. The amendment prepared by Mr. Quay (rep., Pa.), that nothing in any law, to the contrary, shall preclude a court of the United States from considering and determining as to the constitutionality and validity of the income tax, was offered by Mr. Hill (dem., N. Y.), who explained that a certain section of the revised statutes stood in the way of a suit for injunction against the assessment or collection of a tax; and it was that section which the amendment proposed to set aside for the special purpose of testing the constitutionality of the income tax. A motion to lay the amendment on the table was made by Mr. Peffer (pop., Kan.) and was defeated, whereupon the bill and the amendment went over without action, till to-day—Mr. Quay giving notice of other amendments to re-enact the whole of the McKinley law, and to reimpose the wool tax. The Nicaragua canal bill was taken up and an argument was made against it by Mr. Caffery (dem., La.) The Aldrich resolution declaring the sense of the senate to be that one or more ships of the navy should be stationed at Honolulu went over till to-day when the latest correspondence from the Hawaiian islands—to which Mr. Aldrich wished to refer—will be printed. The reinstatement of Mr. Harris (dem., Tenn.) as president of the senate pro tem in place of Mr. Ransom (dem., N. C.), who retired voluntarily from that position, took place with all the necessary formalities.

Expurgated the Living Pictures.

Waterbury, Conn., Jan. 11.—City Clerk R. F. Grady visited a matinee performance of a ladies burlesque company in the parlor opera house and ordered a large part of the performance expurgated, including living pictures and the dance du ventre, under penalty of revocation of the license. The company has been playing to good business.

WHITE HOUSE RECEPTION.

President and Mrs. Cleveland Entertain Diplomats.

Washington, Jan. 11.—President and Mrs. Cleveland, assisted by the ladies of the cabinet circle, received the officers of the diplomatic corps last night from 9 to 11, at the executive mansion. This is an annual event, and is always the occasion for a great turning out of the social set of the capital city. Last evening's levee was no exception to the rule, and from seven o'clock (two hours before the president was ushered into the reception room by the paen, "Hail to the Chief") until 11, a steady stream of humanity was emptied into the historic white building.

The night outside was made dreary by an incessant and depressing rain, but that only served to make the contrast more striking within, where the handsome uniforms of the diplomatists and the rich costumes of the hundreds of ladies made a scene long to be remembered. There were present besides the special guests of honor army and navy officers, senators and representatives, government officials and the leading lights of society here all escorting ladies, and they taxed the capacity of the mansion to its utmost.

The marine band, under the leadership of Prof. Fanciulli, dispensed choice musical gems throughout the affair.

The rooms of the white house were beautifully embellished with palms and plants, and in the great east room the floricultural decorations were models of beauty from an artistic standpoint. The three colossal chandeliers were incased in verdant smilax, and varicolored miniature electric lights heightened the effect. Against the east wall of the room were majestic palms reaching to the ceiling and spreading to a width of twenty feet or more, and from these electric lights of all colors peeped out. The mantels were banked in hyacinths, roses and midget palms.

"A GRAND SHOOTING MATCH!"

Farmer Pawling Invites His Mother-in-Law to Witness Murder.

Lewisburg, Pa., Jan. 11.—White Deer township, this county, was the scene of an awful tragedy yesterday, Wesley Pawling having shot his wife and child and hanged himself. Pawling was a well to do farmer and lived about a mile west of New Columbia. He went to the house of his mother-in-law, a half mile distant and asked her accompany him back home to witness "a grand shooting match." This she did, and upon their arrival at the Pawling homestead, he took from his pocket a revolver and shot his four weeks old child dead, and then shot his wife, but it is thought not fatally. He then went quickly to the barn and hanged himself. Jealously is assigned as the cause of the young man's rash act. Mr. Pawling was a son of the late B. S. Pawling and was married a few years ago to Miss Ella Bohr.

Will Make Their Own Terms.

Pittsburg, Jan. 11.—The district convention of Pittsburg coal miners adjourned finally last evening without taking decisive action on the wage rate question. The miners will make their own terms with the operators. The district leaders will endeavor to secure a committee of investigation and arbitration to establish a satisfactory uniform rate. The miners' officers say that the situation in Pennsylvania and Ohio is worse than for many years and will not be straightened out until there has been another fight, unless the operators consent to better terms.

Anti-Toxine for Diphtheria.

Washington, Jan. 11.—Consul General Mason has sent the state department an exhaustive report describing the manufacture of anti-toxine at Hoechst near Frankfort-on-Maine, which is the only establishment at which the new specific for diphtheria has yet been produced commercially and in quantities adequate to meet the rapidly increasing demand. This factory is now producing over 2,000 doses per day. The report was intended for the use of congress in case that body considered the subject.

Stole 52,000 Stamps.

Washington, Jan. 11.—William Smith, an employe of the bureau of engraving, appointed from New Jersey, was found guilty of stealing 52,000 two-cent postage stamps from the bureau. The jury recommended the prisoner to the mercy of the court. Two other men are yet to be tried for complicity in the robbery. Smith and one of these men went to New York with two women and disposed of a large number of stamps there.

A SKILLFUL CONSPIRACY

South Dakota Deliberately Held Up.

A Scheme Disclosed Whereby Treasurer Taylor's Bondsmen Would Be Protected and Himself Saved from Punishment — Efforts Are Being Made To Catch Him.

Pierre, S. D., Jan. 11.—Developments indicate that there was a conspiracy of large proportions in the flight of State Treasurer Taylor and the loss to the state of $350,000. Facts have come into the possession of the state officials which makes them reasonably certain that Taylor and confederates deliberately went to work, after it became evident that he could not square his accounts, to make the state compromise, by which he should be saved from punishment and his bondsmen protected from loss. The state was in a tight place financially.

If not a cent had been lost there would have been a deficit July 1 next, of fully $100,000 due to excess of appropriations by the last legislature and to the slow payment of taxes on account of the short crops. The limit of taxation has been reached and the limit of indebtedness passed for some time. To extricate the commonwealth has been the subject commanding earnest thought of the state officials for several months. Permanent appropriations are so high that the legislature, no matter what economy is practiced, could hardly bring the expenditures within the revenue. There was due Jan. 5, $220,000 worth of funding warrants held in the east. There was due a considerable sum on the coupon bonds while the sinking fund was preparing to take up the semi-annual interest to the amount of $20,000. The legislature was in session and immediate calls would be made on the treasury for at least $300,000.

Of course the treasurer knew all this. It is believed by the authorities on substantial evidence that realizing he would be short $100,000 when the transfer was to be made Jan. 8, he consulted with some friends and backers and they decided that the best thing to do was to seize all the money in the treasury and put it in a place of hiding where it could be reached when desired. Then, when the default was discovered the state would be found bankrupt. It could not pay its obligations and having exceeded its limit of debt could not borrow. If it sued on the bonds of the treasurer two years more would elapse before any money could be recovered and during that time the credit of South Dakota would sink very low. The parties to the plan concluded rather than come to this pass the state officials would do almost anything within reason. Then the plan was to come forward through an agent and propose to pay back to the state the $250,000 which the treasurer has carried off on condition that the bondsmen should be released and that Taylor should be relieved from prosecution. Had he come to Pierre Tuesday and surrendered he would have been a common felon and would have gone to the penitentiary for ten or fifteen years. His bondsmen would have been bankrupt, since a suit under the bonds at this time would have driven several, if not all of them to the wall. Under the plan adopted both Taylor and his bondsmen would be free from any annoyance and the state would be the loser. Great efforts are being made to apprehend Taylor.

Last night ten men left on the midnight train for various parts of the state and by this time all the property in the state belonging to Taylor or any of his bondsmen has been attached.

AMERICAN SOLDIERS DROWNED.

Dropped Off One by One from an Overturned Rowboat.

Niagara on the Lake, Ont., Jan. 11.—A sad drowning accident occurred near here last evening. Three American soldiers from Fort Niagara being the victims.

The men left the fort intending to cross the river to this town and when within about 200 yards of shore the boat became fast in the moving ice. After drifting for some time a tremendous wave struck the boat upsetting it. They succeeded in climbing on the bottom of the boat calling for help to the crowd of spectators who lined the beach unable to do anything to assist them. After clinging to the boat for an hour the soldiers one by one dropped off. It was impossible to obtain their names.

Ingalls' Friends Indignant.

Topeka, Kan., Jan. 11.—Ex-Senator Ingalls' friends are here in large numbers and protesting vigorously against the action of the committee in charge of the inauguration ceremonies next Monday and of the big camp fire to be held Monday night in honor of Gov. Morrill in omitting Ingalls from the programme. His friends are charging that the other senatorial candidates influenced the committee to ignor him for fear a speech from him would create a stampede among members of the legislature who have not expressed a choice for senator.

Ill from Eating Cheese.

Bradford, Pa., Jan. 11.—Several persons in East Bradford were made ill, it is claimed, by eating cheese purchased at a grocery store. None of the cases were serious and the report telegraphed from this place of a wholesale poisoning with probable fatal results was an exaggeration of the facts. The cheese was analyzed later and found to possess nothing more formidable than the usual forms of life disclosed by the microscope.

Committed Suicide in Prison.

Philadelphia, Jan. 11.—Edward F. Vansciver, aged 45 years, committed suicide yesterday in Moyamensing prison with a strap that he borrowed from a fellow prisoner.

CHAPTER I—CONTINUED.

They rallied round her that night in all the splendor of their ancien regime, and the duchess was herself immeasurably magnificent. But, sooth to say, the gentle lady in the imperial box, with the gruesome man of power beside her, wore her diadem with as fine a grace and was a trifle more magnificent yet—she could not be more beautiful. The duchess herself was not slow to see that charm of distinction, and to acknowledge it with her own lovely graciousness.

It was when they were leaving the house that just as the duchess was passing to her carriage, her cloak slipped from her shoulder, and a young officer of the Imperial guard, standing near, passed an idle jest, only half under his breath, about that dazzling shoulder.

The duke waited upon his wife to her carriage, and then returned; and pausing deliberately to draw off his glove, he slapped the young officer with it across the cheek, and went back to the carriage which was waiting.

"It was a foolishness," the duchess heard M. Etienne saying when he came in shortly after their return. "It was a madness! Why have heard it? Why have flattered the flaneur with notice? At a time, too, when we wish especially for quiet. His friend will be here to-morrow—and of course the duke will waive considerations of rank—"

"What! A duel!"

"The Bois."

"You mock yourself with me!" said her grace.

"Not at all. It is a sous-lieutenant of the Imperial guard—born in some barrack—and although the duke has been an unrivaled swordsman, his hand is less sure than it was, and this M. Leconte is the finest swordsman in France."

"I cannot believe it!"

"As your grace pleases. But it will be all the same if it is pistols, for Leconte's ball—I made inquiries—goes straight as a sunbeam."

"Oh, M. Etienne!" cried the duchess, clasping her hands. "Do you mean—"

"I mean," said M. Etienne, quite heedless in his vexation, "that it is exceedingly doubtful if the duke is alive to-morrow to regret his folly—"

CHAPTER II.

"Eh bien, prophet of evil," said the duke, coming down the room, "with what tales are you frightening the duchess! Come, shall it be billiards?" and sauntered off with him.

And the duchess went to her own apartment where Olympe awaited her; and five minutes afterward, wrapped from head to foot in a vast cache-misere, she had stolen down a private passage to the street, with Olympe beside her. "We must ask the gen-d'arme, Olympe; we may have to go to the prefecture; we must learn where he, Leconte, is to be found." And learn she did; and in less than an hour an angry concierge had been pacified with a handful of gold pieces and had ushered into the room, where the young sous-lieutenant sat busy with a letter, his sister from the country.

The moment that the door closed the duchess dropped her vast wrap into Olympe's hands and stood before him in all her starry beauty, the sheen of her pale satins, the sparkle of her innumerable diamonds, the dazzle of her white shoulders, just as she had come from the opera.

For a moment he was aghast. But he had sprung to his feet. "To what do I owe the honor—" he began.

"Oh, monsieur!" cried the duchess, "I come to you a supplicant! An hour ago my husband insulted you—"

"Bitterly!"

"Oh, monsieur!" clasping her beautiful uplifted hands and raising to his the eyes overflowing with tears. "And it means—"

"Sapristi! It means bloodshed, madame!" he exclaimed.

"Oh, no, no!" she cried. "Not that! Not that! And for such an idle thing—oh, never that! Oh, monsieur, you are successful, you are powerful, the emperor is your friend, you can afford to be magnanimous! I beg, I beg you to let it pass—"

"Let it pass, madame! You know not what you say. Let it pass! Ha! ha!"

"What good, alas, what good will it do you to take his life?"

"It will efface the stain on my honor, the sting of his blow. Behold, my cheek burns with it yet!"

"And mine, too, believe me," she said, lifting again the great innocent eyes to his. "It was hot-headed—it was wrong—oh, if there is any reparation—"

"Sacre! There is no reparation," said the officer, like a hero of tragedy, "but death—his death or mine."

"Oh, do not say so! Life is so precious—death is so dreadful—and, oh, monsieur, forgiveness is so beautiful!"

"Forgiveness of such a humiliation!"

"Is it more of a humiliation than I undergo; I, a woman, who come to you in your apartment, and beg my husband's life of you? I have asked—I have heard—they tell me your ball never fails—"

"And is it monsieur, your husband, who perhaps sends you here?"

"Ciel! It is you who now insult him as grievously! Oh, you cannot, for that momentary burst of foolish vexation be willing to take from him life, from me my husband, from my little sleeping son his father! I implore you—"

"Duchess," said the lieutenant, "you are only wasting time, and compromising yourself here in my apartment."

"I confide in your honor, your silence," she cried.

"It is well," he answered. "But no more. You ask too much."

"Oh, have you no mercy?"

"None. The insult was given in the face of all the world, and in the face of all the world it must be wiped out."

"Monsieur Leconte, you have proved your valor on the battlefield. It is not the first rencontre you have had with pistols and with swords. Your courage is a byword. If you treat this affair as beneath notice, as the action of an exasperated man whom you have reason to pity, it will not injure you. It will give you great friendships, of which you may be glad in the future. Your friend, the emperor, does not wish an added excitement just now. Oh, believe me, you can well afford to send no challenge—to act as if nothing had taken place—to give it your disdain."

The officer gazed at her wonderingly—so young, so beautiful, so resplendent, so sad, so imploring. Perhaps her last arguments gave him cause. And then the statements relative to his courage—they were certainly true—it was well known. And to win the Sarazines Beauxlieux, perhaps, to the empire—it might be worth while. And then a mad, rash humor seized him. "Madame," he said, "I will accede to your wishes on one condition. Your husband's blow still tingles on my cheek. I will repay it—by leaving my kiss upon the cheek of his wife!"

For a moment the duchesse turned, gaspingly, holding both hands to Olympe, and her pallor, where the rose bloomed beneath the ivory, became the pallor of death. But directly she had summoned her resources. What had she come here for but to purchase the life of her boy's father at any cost? She turned again and glanced up at him, and then dropped her lids till the long black lashes swept her marble cheek. "Volontiers, monsieur," she said, and she made a step forward, softly turning her cheek.

But the man did not move. The beautiful creature there, so proud, so chaste, willing to purchase safety for her child's father at the price of this insult to herself, this insult of which in all the years of her life she would be sensible, the color now rising slowly in her cheek, vividly, in a stain, as if to meet the affront. No, he could not!

"Forgive me," he said. "And go. You have saved your husband's life—for my bullet would have pierced his heart. Go. I will keep your secret." And doubting her senses, bewildered, full of joy, the duchess suddenly fell on her knees before him and seized his hand and covered it with kisses. And then Olympe had the cache-misere about her, and the officer had gone down with them and put her into the carriage. When the duchess recalled that scene and its expressions of her gratitude, she knew it never would have happened so but for that Basque woman, her peasant grandmother.

And so it came about that no challenge arrived at the Hotel Beauxlieux the next day, nor any day thereafter. And when his wonderment had subsided, the contempt that the duke already felt for the new people was a thousand times enhanced by the circumstance. "A court of shopkeepers!" he cried. An imperial guard who kept silence under a slap on the face—they were all part and parcel together—he despised them, and was at no pains to keep his despising quiet. And thus this very action of the duchess was the cause of his making himself more offensive to the imperialists than he had been, so offensive that at last it was open war with Duke des Sarazines Beauxlieux, and he found the old chateau in the Landes, a place better suited to his health than the house in Paris where kings had been his guests.

But after all it was not love, certainly not wifely love, that had made the duchesse interfere on her husband's account in that matter of the challenge. It was a life to save—and she herself the cause of the trouble—it would have been almost as necessary for her to try to avert the evil had the person concerned been St. Malo, or Montaguevert, or a stranger. She had a warm and quiet affection for her husband, an immense belief in him and admiration for him, but that was all.

When the duke died and left her with his son, she wept; she was bereft. But here was the duke, and now all the more the duke, all the more proudly and fondly insisted on since shorn of imperial favor.

NEARING THE CENTURY MARK.

Plainfield Foresters Review Their Successes and Take Hope for Greater Growth.

Court Plainfield, Independent Order of Foresters, at their meeting last night initiated four members in the mysteries of Forestry, and High Chief Ranger Bingham of Elizabeth, assisted by Brothers McIntosh, Hansen and Casey as Supreme Marshal, Supreme Vice-Ranger, and Supreme Secretary, respectively, installed the officers for the ensuing year. James McClinton was appointed Senior Beadle, and Joseph Bird was unanimously chosen to fill the important office of District Deputy Chief Ranger for one year. In good and welfare the officers installed. In a few words each thanked the Court for the various honors conferred upon them, and High Chief Ranger Bingham paid an eloquent tribute to the energy displayed during the past year, when an addition of fifty was made to the membership. He also lauded the officers for the manner in which the ritualistic work was conferred, and had no hesitation in saying that the Court was officered second to none in his jurisdiction. The Court commenced the new year with 78 members and a good treasury, and an effort will be made to reach the century in membership before June.

HINDERED TRAVEL.

A Bent Axle Causes Delay on the Jersey Central.

At 3 yesterday afternoon as engine 400, which was pulling the fast freight from Jersey City to Bound Brook on track No. 2 the axle of one of the cars was bent in such a manner that the train was obliged to stop near Richmond street and leave the crippled car for the wreck train, which was at once ordered from Elizabethport.

When the wrecker arrived it was found necessary to jack up the freight car where it stood, remove the old axle and replace it with a straight one.

Traffic was of course suspended on No. 2 track during the three hours necessary for the job, but very little delay was occasioned as track No. 6 was used temporarily by the express trains.

The car which caused the trouble was picked up by a westbound freight at 6:10 and proceeded on its way.

Jacobs of Chicago, Chairman of the Executive Committee of the International Convention, are expected to speak. This will be a meeting of unusual interest to the Sunday-school workers, and the only one of this character to be held in northern New Jersey.

Fire in the Burnt District.

Policeman Frederickson found a lively blaze in progress in the old lumberyard of Cook Bros., on Park avenue, at 1 this morning. He signaled for Policeman Cooney, and the two investigated preliminary to sending in an alarm. They found that the boards covering the kiln of the stoneyard occupying a portion of the old lumberyard site had taken fire. By pulling the boards away, and threshing them about, they subdued the flames and saved the firemen from a cold run in sleepy time.

Jack'll Be There.

John H. Carney, Plainfield's popular Dutchman, has accepted a very pressing invitation to be present at the installation of Hopocon Tribe, I. O. R. M., of Port Oram, Thursday, Jan. 17. Mr Carney was present on a similar occasion in Port Oram four years ago and his Dutch specialties gave such great pleasure to his auditors that he has several times been urged to favor with a return visit, but has never found it convenient until the present time.

PLAINFIELD'S BATTLE.

The Nation's War Department Takes a Hand.

LAMONT DIRECTS THE ANSWER.

No Credence Whatever Accorded to the Statements of "American"—Since "Facts Count", Here Are Some for His Delectation—A Reply That Was Necessarily Belated Because of the Department Investigation.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE DAILY PRESS:—I see your paper at odd times, and in the issue of Nov. 20, 1894, I find an article of over a column in length, headed "Reply to Wilbere" and signed "American". Among other things in this would be patriot's letter the following statement appears:

"The official War Records show that during the war the proportion of desertions was as follows: American born, 5 per cent; British (Protestant) 7 per cent; Germans, 16 per cent; Irish Catholic, 72 per cent. Facts count."

I was surprised, first that any man who lays so much stress on the point that facts count would make such a statement, and surprised in the second place that a paper with the standing that the Plainfield Daily Press has would publish a statement which has on its very face all the earmarks of falsehood, on any condition other than over the writer's full name. A plain unvarnished lie put in the public press, should never, in my judgment, be hid behind an assumed name. If a man wishes to make an assertion without data or proof, he should do so in the open day over his own signature, and like a man bear all the consequences, and not sneak like a cur dog behind a nom de plume.

I herewith send you a letter from the War Department, which gives facts, and "facts count"; and I ask you to publish it with my letter in as prominent place and type as you did the lie which "American" wrote with the intent to arouse the bitter passion of prejudice among our people. In the article referred to there are other glaring falsehoods which I will not answer, as I think this letter from the War Department is sufficient to condemn his vaporings as a malicious attempt to stir up strife and discord in a peaceable community, and that it will convince any reasonable man that there is not a scintilla of truth in his whole letter, but that it was written to malign a large and respectable body of American citizens.

The figures given and purporting to show the percentage of desertions of the different nationalities of which the armies was composed are false in every particular. "Facts count"; the letter from Col. Ainsworth, by order of Daniel Lamont, Secretary of War, shows conclusively that no such record has ever been made. "Facts count", and as facts do count the facts given by the War Department show that the story of desertions as given by "American" is a tissue of falsehoods made from whole cloth, and my convictions are that "American" knew he was lying when he wrote that letter; but if he did not he is too ignorant to write for the Plainfield Daily Press, and I care not which horn of the dilemma he may choose.

RECORD AND PENSION OFFICE, WAR DEPARTMENT.

Washington City, December 27, 1894.

H. J. Tettemer, No. 721 and 726 Lucas avenue, St. Louis, Missouri.

SIR:—In reply to your letter of the 24th instant, received today, relative to a statement by certain newspapers that seventy-five per cent. of the deserters of the late war were Irish Catholics, I am directed by the Secretary of War to inform you as follows:

No compilation has ever been made by this Department upon which any statement concerning the matter can be based.

As a matter of fact, the number of soldiers of any given nativity or religious creed in service during the war of the rebellion is not known, and it is not possible, from any data yet prepared, for this or any other Department, or for any individual, official or otherwise, to make even an approximately correct statement of the number or percentage of deserters belonging to any particular creed or nationality.

When it is understood that the War Department is the sole custodian of the records of the armies in service during the war, and that it has made no statement relative to the religious creed of the soldiers in service during the war, or of the number of deserters of any nationality or religious denomination, it will be seen that such statements as have been published on this subject are entitled to no credence whatever.

Very respectfully,

F. C. AINSWORTH,

Colonel U S. Army,

Chief, Record and Pension Office.

THE SEWER QUESTION.

Criticism of a Boroughite's Objections, by a Well-Informed Plainfielder.

A critical reader of The Daily Press desires to call the attention of the "prominent citizen of the borough" to the fact that it was not "intermittent filtration" which East Orange abandoned but "chemical precipitation"—quite another system.

Also that Pullman has been for some eight years a notorious example of how to make a failure of sewage irrigation—by running it solely to make money.

As long ago as 1886, he says, crude sewage was turned for months at a time into Lake Calumet, a sheet of water 3½x1½ miles in extent, and only from one to eight feet deep.

If the prominent citizen, he further says, will agree to give this city a guarantee that a sewer run to the Raritan River below the dam will "settle the matter permanently", he will earn the everlasting gratitude of every Plainfield citizen, and the Dunellenites will make him their patron saint.

By the way, it is asked, why should such constant reference be made to South Framingham? Why not refer once in awhile to other good examples of land disposal—Freehold, for instance, in our own State; or Wayne, Pa., besides a number of others in Massachusetts and many more in the Western States.

The Provost Guard.

The Santa Rosa (Cal.) Democrat has the following to say of Washington Davis's drama, "The Provost Guard", which will be presented at Music Hall, Plainfield, next Thursday evening, January 17:

"The Provost Guard is a realistic militarp drama founded on incidents of the Civil War. The play does not deal with bombastic clap-trap, but is a drama of excellent situations, very bright comedy, clean and witty dialogue and vivid tableaux. The third act deals with the battle of the Cross Roads, Kentucky, and shows the purpose of the Provost Guard, which all well-read people, especially Grand Army men, fully understand and appreciate.

"The material for this play was very carefully gathered by Mr. Davis, and the result is a strong piece different in plot and action from any other military drama that has been produced. All in all it is fully equal to 'Shenandoah', or 'Held by the Enemy'.

"The cast embraces ten of the best professional people in America under the management of W. R. Palmer."

The Third Regiment Cadet Corps of Plainfield, under the command of Capt. George F. Edwards, will participate in the military scenes. The uniforms and everything tributary to the play are perfect. To the present date the play has been the most successful produced this season.

Fun and Prizes at Cards.

Mr. and Mrs. R. I. Tolles entertained the Whist Club of which they are members, at their home, corner of Orange street and Westervelt avenue, last evening, it being the semi-monthly meeting. Those present were: Mr and Mrs John P Emmons, Mr and Mrs Peter Emmons, Mr and Mrs John Whitenack, Mr and Mrs Fred M Slater, Mr and Mrs Messerschmidt, Mr and Mrs L B Woolston, Mr and Mrs. J F Buckle and Mr and Mrs R I Tolles.

Mr and Mrs Peter A Emmons were awarded first prizes, consisting of a pretty paper cutter and a bronze card receiver; Mrs Tolles won the second prize, a card receiver. The consolation prize was cheerfully given to John P. Emmons; it was a monkey in a box.

It is understood that at the next meeting of the club, which will be held at the home of Mr and Mrs John Whitenack, John P Emmons will wear his new pair of bowling shoes.

North Plainfield School Notes.

Library books were received by the scholars this week.

Miss Shafer, who was the Junior teacher a few years ago is again teaching in the absence of the Junior teacher, Miss Petrie, who is detained at home on account of illness.

Miss Grant of Plainfield is teaching the Third grade in the absence of Miss Dailey, the regular teacher.

Adapted from the Greek.

Thales, the father of Greek philosophy, is accredited with saying "There is nothing more beautiful than the world", and if alive today he would doubtless add that there is nothing much more beautiful in it than the latest attractions in jewelry and silverware on exhibition at Collier's, 103 Park avenue. They are up to date and will amply repay inspection.

Fractured Two Ribs.

A. C. Johnson, brother of J. W. Johnson, residing on Johnston's drive on the mountainside, fell down the cellar stairs at his home last night and fractured two ribs. The cause of his fall was an old hat lying at the head of the stairs, over which he stumbled. He had a lighted lamp in his hand at the time, and it is fortunate a serious fire was not caused.

HIGH SCHOOL NOTEBOOK.

The prize essays on the "Use and Abuse of Tobacco" have been handed in, and considerable interest is manifested as to who shall receive the prizes. Almost the entire Senior class entered the contest, while the Third class had the fewest competitors.

Both the beginners and advanced Physics classes have arrived at the study of electricity, in which they are joined by several of the Seniors who wish a more thorough knowledge of the subject. The Zoology class has taken up the study of the smaller animals. The Astronomy class has just begun the study of the individual planets. The Senior English Literature class is studying Spenser and has begun reading "The Faerie Queen".

The Senior class is at present deeply interested in the power plant being constructed at Niagara Falls; short sketches have been written on the subject, and now each pupil is expected to give a two-minute talk on it.

The vote for the school colors will be taken Monday morning; five new selections were handed in yesterday. The voting will be very close.

The Kappa Delta Phi held its regular meeting yesterday afternoon. Owing to the absence of two of the debaters, the debate was postponed. After an earnest discussion a society pin was adopted. The design chosen was a plinth of black enamel with Kappa Delta Phi engraved on it in gold. John V. Beekman, Jr., was appointed to procure the pins. The colors of the society were changed to black and gold in order to avoid complications with the class of '93. Charles B. Morse was appointed a committee to make arrangements relating to the Vincent lectures. The programme committee reported the following programme for Jan. 18. Debate, "From which does the Mind gain the more: Knowledge, Reading, or Observation?" The speakers for the side of Reading will be Lewis Rand, Henry Eggerding and Edgar I. Serrell. Those for the side of Observation will be John V. Beekman, George A. Horne and Chas. B. Morse. At the close of the business session each member spoke for two minutes on any subject that they wished. The speakers and subjects were: John V. Beekman, Jr., Bishop Patterson; A B Crane, The Minds of Great men; C. B. Morse, An Ideal Commonwealth; Lewis Rand, Further Ideas on an Ideal Commonwealth; J H. Craig, Instinct of Pigeons; G. A. Horne, The Power Plant at Niagara Falls; H. B. Drake, The Spartan Institutions; Chas. Noble, The Mind of the Dog.

The regular meeting of the Lyceum was held as usual yesterday afternoon. The programme consisted of a hash debate on the subject "Is this country more indebted to capital than to labor?" J. H Craig, Nathan Lane, Jr., and Chas. B Morse spoke for the affirmative, and H B. Drake and J. V. Rittenhouse for the negative. A committee, composed of Lewis Rand, Chas. Noble and Lambert Fish, decided the debate in favor of the negative. It was proved that capital and labor depended on one another, but that labor had the greatest influence. At the close of the meeting the committee on the St. Valentine's Day meeting met and made a number of the preliminary arrangements. Further details of the meeting will be announced in a few days.

NINETY-FIVE.

Died in the Night.

When Constable W. R. Mattox was going home about 12 last night, is passing Evan Jones's property on Webster place he heard groans which at first led him to believe that a man was in distress.

He went into the yard, and found a horse tied to the fence. The animal was covered with a blanket, but seemed to be suffering.

Mr. Mattox remained some time trying to get the horse on his feet, but did not succeed. This morning he went to the place and found that during the night the horse had died. He asked Mr. Jones about it, and the latter said he did not know to whom the animal belonged.

The Sanitary Code.

The meeting of the Plumbers Association in Odd Fellows Hall last evening was called to order by President John Carney.

The chief topic for discussion was the proposed new sanitary code, but owing to a lack of needful statistics the matter was deferred for one week, when a committee will be appointed.

Choral Rehearsal.

The Choral society will meet for rehearsal Monday evening next, in the Sunday-school room of the First Baptist A full attendance is desired. The music in hand will demand the careful attention of the chorus.

A birthday party was given last evening by Mrs. Charles J. Day of Rockview avenue to her nephew, Master Irving M. Day, son of Mr and Mrs Edwin B. Mrs. Day was very becomingly attired in a costume of 'ye olden time", and both she and Master Irving were the recipients of many beautiful presents.

The Institute Bowlers of Newark notified Capt. Hibbits of the C. Y. M. L. bowling team yesterday that it would be impossible for them to play the game scheduled here for last evening, so it was postponed until next Friday night, Jan. 18, on the Lyceum alleys.

EXPRESS CARS BURNED.

A Baggagemaster's Careless ness Causes a Big Blaze.

Long Island City, N. Y., Jan. 12.—At 8:30 o'clock last night a fire which destroyed the express and baggage house, the annex ferry house and sheds, the express and record offices and the headquarters of the Long Island Railroad News company, as well as a frame building on Front street, owned by ex-Mayor P. J. Gleason, started in a combination mail, express and baggage car of the Port Jefferson express standing in the express shed. A baggage master at work in the car knocked down a lamp, setting the interior of the car on fire. A switch engine dragged the burning car and an express car attached to it out in the railroad yard, two blocks from the station. When the city firemen answered the alarm they turned their attention to the burning cars, and knew nothing of the fire in the shed which ran out on the pier, in the East river, 350 feet, until it was beyond control. Then a general alarm was turned in, and the entire fire department responded, as did fifteen fire tugs from the East river and Newtown creek. A strong wind from the river drove the flames through the sheds into the three-story building occupied by the Railroad Young Men's Christian association. There were eight express cars in the shed all of which were burned, with as many loads of express matter and incoming baggage. Ex-Mayor Gleason says his loss is $2,000, with insurance. The Long Island Railroad company's loss will reach $50,000, with partial insurance.

DISFIGURED FOR LIFE.

Vitriol Thrown in a Connecticut Editor's Face.

Waterbury, Conn., Jan. 12.—As Frank B. Steele of Waterbury, editor of the Bridgeport Sunday Herald, was leaving his office at about 6 p. m., last evening an unknown man threw vitriol in his face, from the effects of which he will be scarred for life. Steele had just left his office, in Lilley block, when a man stepped up and walked alongside. Steele noticed the man make a motion and then felt something hot on his face. As he turned the man threw the bottle, striking Steele in the face, cutting him slightly. The man ran, and Steele started to pursue him, but realizing that it was vitriol, he made for an apothecary store nearby, where Drs. Axtelle and Goodenough were summoned.

The vitriol covered most of the left side of his face and ran down the outside of the throat and breast, his clothing about the neck being badly burned. His eyes were uninjured. His assailant is as yet unknown.

AFRAID OF DIPHTHERIA.

Express Companies Refuse To Transport Microbes in Tubes.

Cleveland, Jan. 12.—Health Officer A. W. Nepkins, of Ashtabula, who has been in this city, said the express companies had refused to transport antitoxine culture tubes. There were many genuine cases of diphtheria in Ashtabula and the culture tubes, containing membrane from the throats of diptheretic patients were sent to Cleveland where they were examined by a bacteriologist. The microbes were placed in glass tubes and tightly sealed. Health Officer Leach of this city said there was not the slightest danger of spreading the disease unless the train should be wrecked and the box smashed, and even then there was little danger. The expressmen did not know what they were carrying at first but when they found out they refused to transport more of them.

Count Waldersee, who is still known as the emperor's "coming man," has called upon Bismarck several times. It is reported that the emperor will visit his old chancellor at Schoenhausen in March.

Springer Lectures Southern Members —Representative Waugh Throws a Bombshell Into the Discussion and Stirs Up Others to the Defense of the General.

Washington, Jan. 12.—The night session of the house was tumultuous over the debate which grew out of the attempt of Mr. Springer (dem., Ill.) to pass a bill granting $100 per month to Major General John A. McClernand. Mr. Jones (dem., Va.), insisted upon making the point of no quorum.

Mr. Springer, in a heated speech, lectured those of his southern democratic colleagues, who constantly assumed an attitude of hostility toward the pension of union soldiers. He called attention to the fact that but thirteen democrats had been returned to the next house from the north. He warned them that if their course was persisted in none will be returned to the succeeding congress.

Mr. Pence (populist) of Colorado, in an earnest speech appealing to Mr. Jones to withdraw his point, spoke of the well known distinguished patriotic services of General McClernand, when Mr. Waugh (rep.) of Indiana, threw a bombshell into the discussion by asking if the beneficiary of this bill was not the same man who was relieved from command before Vicksburg by General Grant for unsoldierly conduct and of whom General Halleck said it was premeditated murder to place him in command.

Mr. Marsh (rep., Ill.) and others hastened to the defense. Mr. Marsh declared hotly that General McClernand had never been guilty of unsoldierly conduct, and the history of the transaction would show that he had not been removed by General Grant for that reason.

"Didn't General Grant remove him for causes which he deemed proper?" persisted Mr. Waugh.

"I do not desire to impugn the character of General Grant," replied Mr. Marsh, sharply, "but I desire to say that his action in this case was a mistake."

"What reason did General Grant assign?" interrupted Mr. Cox (dem., Tenn.). "Was it not because he was too quick at Vicksburg?" The discussion was prolonged for more than two hours, and was marked by several sensational scenes, one of which was the hissing of Mr. Jones when he said that the widow of General John A. Logan, who receives a pension of $2,000 a year, was living in social luxury in this city and annually spent more than her pension money for flowers displayed by her at her social functions.

Later on, when he proclaimed his pride in the confederate cause that had gone down in defeat, the republicans in chorus shouted, "We have no doubt of it!" but in the galleries many of the spectators applauded vigorously. Mr. Springer was finally forced to withdraw the bill. But even after the bill had been withdrawn, Mr. Champ Clark (dem., Mo.) got the floor, and, in a characteristic speech, scored Mr. Jones roundly, as he said, on behalf of his democratic colleagues of the north. He began by saying that the democratic party presented a dissolving view and would soon be lost to sight, though to memory dear.

After appealing to Mr. Jones to allow this meritorious bill to go through, he turned to him and said impressively that the democrats of the north were sick and tired of having their southern party associates come to congress and stab their party in the back. "We are through with you," Mr. Clark concluded.

Dissatisfied Steel Workers.

Pittsburg, Jan. 12.—The employes of the Carnegie Steel company's Homestead works seem to be dissatisfied with the new scale of wages that went into effect on January 1, which makes quite a reduction in the wages of many of them compared with last year's rate. Circulars were distributed in Homestead calling upon all steel workers to attend a meeting to be held at 10 o'clock Sunday morning. While these circulars do not state the purpose of the meeting, it is well understood by people informed on the subject, that the object of the meeting is to protest against the new scale now in effect in the Homestead mill.

A Workman Attempts Murder.

Wyandotte, Mich., Jan. 12.—R. S. Ewer of Detroit, vice-president and manager of the Michigan Alkali company, whose works are located here, was shot at while driving to the works from the depot, by a discharged employe named Watson. Watson fired twice at Mr. Ewer, neither of which took effect. It is believed that Watson's mind is unbalanced.

A Battle Imminent.

London, Jan. 12.—The Rome correspondent of the Central News says the city has been greatly excited by an official dispatch from Massowah that Gen. Baratieri, with the Italian force, is near Ras Mangascia, with the Mahdists but a short distance off. A river separates the hostile armies. The dispatch says that a battle is imminent.

MISSIONARIES IN CHINA.

An American Clergyman Says They Are Treated Nicely.

Terre Haute, Ind., Jan. 12.—A letter received in this city from Rev. W. F. Walker, D. D., a former Indiana M. E. clergyman now at Tien-Tsin, China, dated Dec. 3, says there is no danger at that point for the missionaries who are there "The people are very quiet," he says, "and treat us nicely. Our chapel is open five days of every week. The Japanese claimed they would be in Pekin, Nov. 30, but it looks as if they ever do get there they will not reach us before spring.

"The Chinese are in a bad way because they have no disciplined troops and no disciplined generals. It seems not to be generally understood that in all battles up to this time there has been but little more than half as many Chinese soldiers engaged as Japanese; so of course they have been beaten. This is because the Chinese generals are all equal and cannot agree to do anything together. Each general has his own plans and while one may be advancing another is retreating and they are so envious and jealous that when one gets into an engagement the others will stand by and let him fight it out himself. In any event the war will prove to be a much needed lesson for China."

TAYLOR'S DEFALCATION.

Other South Dakota State Officers Implicated.

Pierre, S. D., Jan. 12.—The Taylor defalcation now threatens to involve some of the other state officials and there are rumors of revelations to be made which will show a condition little less shocking than the treasurer's defalcation.

It is understood that another official having the custody of very large sums of state money was concerned with Taylor in the beginning of the trouble and that he had misused the funds in an equally illegitimate manner. The officials are now investigating the matter and they expect within a day or two to make important disclosures. The legislature has appointed a committee to make a thorough investigation and it is likely that a condition of rottenness will be discovered which will shake the state as even the story of Taylor's downfall has not done.

Memphis, Tenn., Jan. 12.—Ex-Treasurer Taylor, of South Dakota, was under arrest here yesterday, but was released, as the officers here could hear nothing from the South Dakota officials.

PRIESTS FIGHT A DUEL.

One of Them Fatally Wounded—The Other in Prison.

Paila, Mex., Jan. 12.—News comes from Parras of a duel with knives between two Catholic priests. Parras has two parishes, one administered to by Father Brioneu and the other by Father Floris. Jealousies have for a long time existed between the two priests over the religious duties. A few days ago they met and fought with knives. Brioneu is dying, and Floris has been arrested and is in prison.

Piling Up the Deficit.

Washington, Jan. 12.—A treasury statement issued yesterday shows that the expenditures so far this month exceed the receipts by $6,213,743, which makes the deficiency for the fiscal year to date $33,778,204. Of the total receipts so far this month $7,297,244 was from customs, $3,017,947 from internal revenue, and $569,111 from miscellaneous sources. The total receipts since June 30 are $170,273,760, and the disbursements $204,051,968.

Swindler Solomon Held.

Williamantic, Conn., Jan. 12.—Emil Solomon, the swindling Odd Fellow, was brought to this city yesterday from Waterbury and pleaded guilty to swindling the local lodge out of $5 and also admitted other similar swindling operations. Justice Meloney held him for trial in the superior court under $300. Solomon was very penitent and claimed that his swindling acts were done to procure food for his wife and five children.

Gov. Waite in Chicago.

Chicago, Jan. 12.—A committee representing the populists received ex-Gov. Waite at the Union depot when he arrived from Denver and escorted him to the Great Northern hotel. Mr. Waite said he wanted to see the man who could poll the largest vote nominated for the presidency by the populists, and if he was their choice he would do all in his power to be elected. He will lecture here to-night.

Reading's Earnings.

Philadelphia, Jan. 12.—The annual statement of the Philadelphia & Reading Railroad company for the fiscal year ending Nov. 30, 1894, shows gross receipts from traffic, $20,344,775.02; gross expenses $11,273,989.05; leaving earnings from traffic $9,065,785.97. To this is added $505,632.40 profit from other sources and thus showing gross earnings $9,571,418.43.

How She Was Cured By Munyon's Little Pellets After Physicians Had Failed.

Mrs. S. Bates, of Cecil, N. J., adds her testimony to that of the thousands who have been saved from a life of suffering by Munyon's Remedies. She said: "I had suffered greatly with indigestion and stomach trouble. Everything I ate distressed me, I was nervous and fretful and rapidly breaking down. After taking but three doses I felt greatly improved, and after taking one 25c. bottle I was entirely cured."

Lesson For the Week Beginning Jan. 13. The Altar the Topic.

SCRIPTURE READINGS.—Ex. xxx, 1, 10; Rev. viii, 3.

This small altar of acacia wood covered with plates of gold stood in the holy place of the tabernacle and afterward a similar one in the temple at Jerusalem. Behind it hung the veil which concealed the most holy place, containing the chest of the covenant, with tables of stone inscribed with the ten commands, covered with the mercy seat of gold, where that mysterious Shedimah fire shone, while above were spread the wings of cherubim. In the same apartment with the gold altar were the candelabra and the table of memorial bread. No sacrifices were ever offered on this altar. It was designed for the burning of incense at the time of offering the morning and evening sacrifice on the great altar of brass which stood before the door of the tent or temple. Once a year only did blood touch it, when on the day of atonement the high priest, dipping his finger in the blood held in a golden bowl, touched the pinnacles at the corners, and passing behind the curtain sprinkled some before the mercy seat. The incense offered in golden censers placed on this altar was a special compound which no one was allowed to make for private use. It was sprinkled on coals taken from the altar of sacrifice and placed in the censer. The perfumed clouds of smoke filled the air while the people worshiped. All is typical of the prayers of God's people. The Psalmist prayed, "Let my prayer be set forth before Thee as incense." In Revelation, John sees the angel adding to the prayers of the saints much incense, which may signify the merits and intercession of the Saviour. The lesson taught is that the devotions of God's people are continually to be offered to Him from clean hearts, and though the mercy seat be hidden it is near, and the blood of the offering which cleanses the altar of incense is sprinkled also where God's presence abides in his most holy place.

Charity With Discrimination.

Generosity is too much a matter of impulse with the many rather than the results of conviction and careful thought. A pathetic appeal awakens sudden sympathy and secures a generous gift in too many cases where the applicant is unworthy and the donation an injury to him. To give charity so as to relieve need and not develop the pauper spirit in the one helped and pride in the giver is as necessary as it is difficult. Many persons conscientiously never refuse an appeal for food, fearing that if they should deny such a request they might cause one to suffer hunger. Yet there is no surer method of fostering the tramp danger than this unhesitating and indiscriminate feeding of the idle. There are worse things than hunger. To so lose one's manhood and womanhood as to desire to live without labor and be fed by the work of others is destitution of spirit, compared with which hunger and cold are slight evils. The real need is some one to "lift up" and teach them to "look up."

That Bugle Blast.

Much was spoken and written during the past summer and autumn of the special need of the Missionary society and the Thanksgiving day service and offering in its behalf. In some quarters considerable enthusiasm was developed, and many of the chapters responded nobly to the bugle call for half a dollar per member in aid of this interest. Probably there never was a more critical time in the history of this most important benevolent society of the Methodist Episcopal church. The response to the special appeal for funds to keep the work on its present basis at least and respond so far as possible to urgent calls for advance was both hearty and generous. More valuable than the money contributed by the League was the interest aroused in mission work, the increase of understanding of methods, needs and results and the quickening of the spiritual interest of the people in the evangelization of the world.

International Conference.

It will be a notable body which will gather for this convention next June at Chattanooga. Representatives of young Methodism from all continents and the far islands of the sea will be present. The arrangements will be in charge of a general committee composed of three members from each of the three largest Methodist bodies in America, the Methodist Episcopal church, the Methodist Church of Canada and the Methodist Episcopal Church South. C. E. Piper, R. R. Doherty and Secretary E. A. Schell are the members elected by the board of control to represent the Methodist Episcopal church. It means much that the sacrament of holy communion is to have an appropriate place in the order of service.

Convention Courtesies.

City and district unions in several places have been formed where all the young people's societies—endeavor, league, unions, etc.—of all the various churches participate. This is often a good thing. Whatever promotes acquaintance, sociability, mutual helpfulness toward higher ideals and more practical efficiency in the work is to be welcomed. Though regimental organization may still be essential, there is no reason why brigade, division and army corps formation cannot also be adopted with advantage.

Worth Remembering.

It is not until we have passed through the furnace that we are made to know how much dross was in our composition.—Bacon.

When a man doesn't believe what he says he does, he persecutes the man who contradicts him. When he does believe it, he sits quiet.—Wendell Phillips.

We mount to heaven mostly on the ruins of our cherished schemes, finding our failures were successes.—Alcott.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Topic For the Week Beginning Jan. 13. Comment by Rev. S. H. Doyle.

TOPIC.—Soul hunger and soul food.—Ps. lxxxiv, 1-12.

In this psalm the psalmist pours out the longing of his soul for the communion of the sanctuary and points out the blessedness of those who dwell therein. He says, "My soul longeth—yea, even fainteth—for the courts of the Lord; my heart and my flesh cry out for the living God."

This is only an expression of a universal feeling possessed by mankind. Men the world over have soul hunger. Their hearts and their flesh cry out for the living God. There is indelibly stamped upon the heart of man the belief in a supreme Being above and beyond himself, and there is an earnest longing in every soul to come into the proper relation to this Being. This is evidenced by the fact that all nations have believed in a God and have had some way by which they thought they could approach their God.

This soul hunger is an evidence that there must be such a Being. If not, whence came this universal belief in God, and this universal longing after God, and this universal attempt to worship God in some way? We can only explain it in one way, and that is that there must be a God that meets this idea and want. To perform its work in life the eye must have rays of light, and we have the rays of light; the ear must have waves of sound, and we have sound waves. The human soul craves and demands a supreme Being over and above it, and is it possible that while the eyes have light and the ears sound there is nothing to satisfy this intense craving of the human soul for God? Such a thing is not possible. There must be something to satisfy this need and want of the highest and noblest part of man's nature.

And there is something, and that something is Jesus Christ, the bread of life, of whom, if we eat, we shall never hunger, and of whom, if we drink, we shall never thirst. There is a God to satisfy this longing of the soul, and Christ, the Son of God, points us to Him. We may not understand just how Christ satisfies this soul hunger, but this should not worry us. We do not know just how and just when bread becomes life to the body, and yet we know it and eat it. So we know Christ can satisfy this soul hunger; that He is the only true soul food, and therefore we should "taste and see that He is good," for He Himself has said: "I am the living bread, which came down from heaven. If any man eat of this bread, he shall live forever" (John vi, 51).

Home Missions and Christian Endeavor.

In the report of the executive committee of the American Missionary association mention is made in several places of the work of Congregational Christian Endeavorers in connection with home missions. In the work of the Congregationalists with the poor people of the mountains of eastern Tennessee and Kentucky a large portion of the time and strength has been spent in systematic Christian Endeavor work. Many societies have been established, and great good will be accomplished, as these societies will doubtless develop the possibilities of their neighborhood until a church is the result.

Many Christian Endeavor societies have been organized by the Indians who have gone out from the Indian schools under the control of the Congregationalists, and in this work the Indians are exceedingly zealous. The committee also makes grateful acknowledgment of the notable increase in the contributions of Congregational Endeavorers to home missionary work and declares that the spread of these societies in the various departments of that work is a mark and means of great progress.—Golden Rule

Under Heaven's Captaincy.

Are not all true men that live or that ever lived soldiers of the same army, enlisted under heaven's captaincy, to do battle against the same enemy, the empire of Darkness and Wrong? Why should we misknow one another, fight not against the enemy, but against ourselves, from mere difference of uniforms?—Carlyle.

A Beautiful Day.

"I want to do as Jesus would do
If he lived at our house today
With mother and father and brother Will,"
I heard a little girl say.

She ran on errands with willing feet.
From rising to setting of sun
She spoke no words unkind or untrue.
What more could the maiden have done?

Christian Endeavor Notes.

The Christian Endeavor society is left handed and right handed, but never behind hand.—Dr. Rondthaler.

Sixteen members of one York Junior society united with the church in a single month.

Christian Endeavor is the common denominator of all denominations.—Rev. E. Talmadge Root.

"One hundred new societies this year." Pennsylvania's motto has been more than realized, for the 12 months show an increase of 1,118 societies. The total membership of Christian Endeavor in Pennsylvania is now 132,282, 24,718 of whom are Juniors.

The Delaware secretary reports 61 societies, 4,000 members, 20 Junior societies, 450 members, an increase of 33⅓ per cent in the former and 500 per cent in the latter over the preceding year.

A good theme for the Endeavor prayer meeting is, "The Exemplary Endeavor." In some societies the discussion of this subject will bring to light a difference of opinion among the active members.

The presbytery of West Jersey has 38 Christian Endeavor societies.

RHEUMATISM.

The Sure Cure is Dr. Greene's Nervura. Weak Kidneys, Weak Nerves, and Poor Blood Always Accompany Rheumatism They Can All Be Cured by Dr. Greene's Nervura Blood and Nerve Remedy.

NATHAN G. BATCHELDER.

With rheumatism, come weak kidneys, weak nerves, poor blood. Weak kidneys mean death, because they lead to serious kidney diseases, which always kill The symptoms are weak back, pain in the back, bloating, muddy water, tired and languid feeling, gas in the stomach, loss of appetite, coated tongue, bad taste in the mouth, headache, dimness of vision, dryness of skin and nervousness.

Just so surely as you have these symptoms your kidneys are out of order, and you need the one sure cure, Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy. Try a bottle and see how quickly those symptoms will vanish. It cures rheumatism a most dangerous complaint for it leads to fatal heart disease. Mr Nathan G. Batchelder, of Hardwich, Vt, writes:

"A year ago I was badly bloated, and it was said I was goin to die with the dropsy. I commenced taking Dr. Greene,s Nervura blood and nerve remedy. At that time I was a sight to behold. My usual weight was 135 lbs, but I then weighed 185 lbs. from bloating. I also had rheumatism so that I could not get into a sleigh or wagon, and was bent over badly. My stomach was so bad that I could not digest my food, and it pained me a good deal. It had been in this condition for seven years before I began to take Dr. Greene's medicine. but since taking it I can eat as hearty meal as anybody. I have not been out for eight winters until this winter. but this winter I have been out constantly, and too care of my horse and driven frequently. After I got out many of my friends did not know me I was so changed and looked so well.

"For years I only ate one slice of bread in one day, and drank one or two cups of tea, which was all I could eat, and I sometimes suffered from that.

"I was about as bad a used up man as ever lived for a long time, and I expected to die anytime; but thanks to Dr. Greene's wonderful medicine, I am greatly improved

"Now all my bloat is gone, and I am as well of that as ever. My rheumatism is practically gone, and my stomach is sound and digests my food perfectly, and I sleep soundly. The doctor who treated me did me no good, and he said I would not live six months I was in such bad order. Other doctors said it was the most remarkable case they had ever known, to have me come up the way I did My case is widely known.

"I can recommend Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy as the best medicine I ever saw or heard of, and I will cheerfully answer any inquiries about my case, but for seven years I could not write my name I was so trembly."

Mr. H. R. Kimball, druggist, of Hardwick, says "I knew of Mr. Nathan G. Batchelder's remarkable case, and the statement is true."

It cures quickly and permanently. rheumatism, neuralgia, kidney and liver disease, and makes good blood and strong nerves. Everybody, both physicians and the people everywhere acknowledge Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy to be the greatest known cure for disease. People who take it get well.

Why waste time in trying uncertain and untried remedies, when here is a physician's prescription, a discovery made by the greatest living specialist in curing nervous and chronic diseases. Dr Greene, of 35 West 14th St, New York City. If you take this medicine you can consider yourself under Dr. Greene's direct professional care, and you can consult him or write to him about you case, freely and without charge. This is a guarantee that his remedy will cure, possessed by no other medicine in the world.

Charging the Lines at Fort Hindman.

On Jan. 11, 1863, the Union army of the Mississippi, led by General John A. McClernand, carried the works at Arkansas Post (Fort Hindman) by storm. McClernand's forces outnumbered the garrison, and the work was easily surrounded by the army and navy. After a bombardment of half an hour from the gunboats and land batteries the infantry charged upon the rifle pits protecting the flanks of the fort. The brunt of the struggle fell to Thayer's Iowa brigade and Hovey and Burbridge's mixed commands. Hovey and Thayer charged through a heavy fire of musketry and artillery to within rifle range of the main parapet. The bombardment had silenced all but one of the guns in the works, but the commandant, General Churchill, resolved to hold out with his 5,000 infantry.

A final assault was made at 3:15 p. m. Burbridge's men dashed across the open marshes in full range of the enemy's bullets to the intrenchments. The garrison ceased firing, white flags appeared on the parapets, and Burbridge demanded surrender. Churchill accused his men of treachery, but consented to a truce, which ended in surrender.

The heaviest regimental loss in the battle fell upon the Twenty-sixth Iowa. The colonel, eight of his officers and 108 soldiers, were shot down.

A handsome and valuable souvenir, representing faithfully the wealth and beauty of Plainfield, will soon be issed from the office of The Daily Press. Work on this book, "Plainfield, N. J., Illustrated", has been in careful and steady progress, and is now nearing completion It will add substantially to Plainfield's glory; and its foreign circulation, already largely provided for, will bring material profit to Plainfield interests.

The letters of Mr. Tetterman and Col Ainsworth in this issue are important additions to the controversy which was started in these columns as a result of the complete publication therein of the speech of Judge Wilbere in this city. The reply to "American" loses none of its strength by being late, and on the contrary is the more convincing because it proceeds from such careful investigation. Aside from the issue at stake, the correspondence gives additional proof of the widespread circulation and national high regard enjoyed by The Daily Press, which is respected everywhere for being a newspaper whose columns are open to all the people without fear or favor

REMOVAL.

Dr. Lighthill begs leave to give notice that he has removed to

NO. 132 CRESCENT AVE.

(a few doors from his former location) where he can be consulted on all chronic diseases of whatever name and nature.

Dr. Lighthill refers with pardonable pride to the success of his practice in Plainfield and submits below a few of the many testimonials which he has received from grateful patients. A mass of similar ones can be seen at his office.

AN ALMOST MIRACULOUS CURE.

The Statement of Mr. Edward Teel, Jr., of Dunellen, N. J.

TO THE PUBLIC:

From a sense of duty I desire to call public attention to the almost miraculous cure which Dr. Lighthill effected in the case of my wife. For eleven years she had been afflicted with piles of an unusual severe and distressing character. She suffered every day of her life the most intense pain, attended with frequent and profuse hemorrhage. This state of things debilitated her entire system until she became a perfect wreck of her former self.

We made every effort to obtain a cure but they all resulted in bitter disappointment, although a number of physicians of excellent reputations for skill in that direction had treated her case. She grew worse and worse all the time, the pain became perfectly unbearable and I felt she could not bear the strain of her condition much longer. In this extremity, a friend of mine, Mr. W. E. Dilts, a resident of Roselle, N. J., a passenger conductor on the New Jersey Central told me that he had been similarly affected, and had been permanently cured by Dr. Lighthill, after other medical skill had failed. He assured me that the doctor would cure my wife, no matter how severe her case may be, and his prediction proved perfectly correct. In spite of her desperate condition, Dr. Lighthill, I am glad to say, has effected a complete and perfect cure in her case, and has given her new life.

Since the cure has been effected she has gained in health and strength and is so improved in appearance that her friends scarcely recognize her. They all consider her cure as almost miraculous, and Dr. Lighthill's praise is heard on every side Our gratitude to Dr. Lighthill is unbounded and we only hope that other sufferers may be benefited by this publication.

EDWARD TEEL, JR.

A Flattering Testimonial from Colonel John Pietrich, One of Plainfield's Oldest and Best Known Residents.

16 ARLINGTON PLACE,
Plainfield, N. J., July 17, 1894.

I am profoundly grateful to Dr. Lighthill for his speedy and radical cure of a most painful malady of over ten years standing with which I was afflicted.

I deem it proper to say to all afflicted to place themselves under the care of this skilful physician and be permanently cured.

I will cheerfully impart any information I possess when called upon.

JOHN DIETRICH.

Mr. Thomas Callahan of No. 214 Richmond street Cured of a Very Distressing Trouble by Dr. Lighthill.

PLAINFIELD, N. J., June 1, 1894.

TO THE PUBLIC:

For some time past I have been greatly distressed with noises in the head. They were all over my head and troubled me constantly: they were loudest at night when everything was quiet and at such times would often keep me from sleep and disturb my rest. In fact they got to be so bad and distressing that they affected my whole nervous system as well as my health. I did not obtain the least relief until I placed myself under the care of Dr. Lighthill, of No. 132 Crescent avenue, who effected a complete cure in my case in a short time and made me a very happy man.

THOMAS CALLAHAN,
214 Richmond street.

A Card From Mr. T. R. VanZandt,

of Nos. 304 and 306 Park ave.,
Plainfield, N. J

I certify with pleasure that Dr. Lighthill has effectually cured me of a most painful case of piles. For some time past I had been subject to its attacks, but the last attack was so exceedingly painful that it completely upset my whole system. The pain extended to my legs and in many other directions, and made me so nervous that I could neither sleep, sit down, lie down or move about without serious discomfort and distress. Such was my condition when I applied to Dr. Lighthill for relief, and I am glad to say that as soon as he took hold of my case, I began to improve, and in a short time found myself completely cured. Dr. Lighthill has also effected a radical and permanent cure in a most terrible case of piles on my cousin, Mr. J. V. Z. Griggs, of Rocky Hill, N. J., whose flattering testimonial is in Dr. Lighthill's possession.

VALUED ENDORSEMENT.

SCHAGHTICOKE, N. Y.—It is ignorance rather than anything else that makes life miserable, but ignorance of the value of Dr David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy does not exist in Schaghticoke today, as a blood medicine and nerve tonic it stands supreme. One of the principal reasons for its popularity comes from the great benefit our fellow townsman, Andrew Sipperley derived from its use. Mr. Sipperley has suffered for years past with a chronic kidney trouble, frequent bilious attack, and, at intervals with violent neuralgia in the head and face. Up to last fall he rarely knew a well day. At that time his wife who had learned of the good of Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy had accomplished, determined to have him use it In writing about his sickness, Mr. Sipperley said.

"For several years I was subject to attacks of kidney trouble and gravel, which was attended with most excruciating pain but since I began the use of Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy I have had no serious trouble and my general health is greatly improved. I know of a great many people about here who have used Favorite Remedy, and in every instance benefit has followed. One of the officers of the Albany, N. Y., Hospital recently said, in speaking of Favorite Remedy—"I know of its great medical value, and to my knowledge it cures the diseases for which it is prepared."

The great value of Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy lies in the fact that it dissolves the excess of uric acid in the blood. Such ailments as rheumatism, neuralgia, nervousness, dyspepsia, kidney, liver and urinary troubles, and the sickness peculiar to women all come from this one cause. Favorite Remedy dissolves this acid and expels it from the system, thus curing the disease. In cases of scrofula, diabetes and Bright's disease, it has cured where other treatments have failed.

The reader of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly on the blood and mucous surface of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer $100 for any case that it fails to cure.

EVANGELIST WRIGHT ILL.

His Visit to Plainfield Deferred.

News was received today that Evangelist Wright's visit to Plainfield is deferred. He was to begin evangelistic services in the First Presbyterian Church tomorrow night, but has been seized with a slight hemorrhage necessitating rest. He hopes to come to Plainfield at the end of next week.

New Officers Raised Up.

Last evening District Deputy Westlake of Elizabeth and his staff raised up the newly elected officers of Miantonomah, a full list of whom has previously appeared in The Press.

After Deputy Westlake has performed the ceremonies, the retiring Sachem, Joseph E. Wyckoff, was presented with a beautiful Past Sachem's regalia. Mr. Wyckoff in his usual happy manner thanked his friends and brothers who had so nobly stood by him during his term of office and expressed his appreciation of the elegant regalia which adorned his manly figure for the first time last night. Visiting brothers offered interesting remarks and a collation followed.

—The sale of the Frazee property yesterday was adjourned for one week.

—The Marshall P. Wilder entertainment Tuesday evening will afford a chance of rare enjoyment to Plainfielders.

—The paper to be read by Rev. G. Kennedy Newell before the ministers next Monday has been wrongly announced by another paper. The correct title is "Municipal Outdoor Relief".

WOMAN'S TRIALS.

SOME LIGHT ON THE SUBJECT.

So Many Suffer Without Knowing Why. Much Can Be Avoided.

[SPECIAL TO OUR LADY READERS.]

So many feel the very life crushed out of them, wake up cheerful and happy, determined to do so much before the day ends, and yet:

Before the morning is very old, the fearful backache or bearing-down feeling attacks them, the bravespiritsinks back in affright; no matter how hard they struggle, the "clutch" is upon them, and they sink into a chair, crying, "Oh! why should I suffer so?

What can I do?"

The answer is ready, your cry has been heard, and a woman is able to restore you to health and happiness.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound will stop your torture and restore your courage. All your pains come from a deranged uterus or womb.

It is the greatest of all rewards to receive such letters as the following from Miss Louise Müller, who lives at 44 Michigan Ave., in Evanston, Ill. She says:

"As I have used Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and have thereby become entirely well, I am recommending all my lady friends to use it. I am sure it will help them in all cases of womb trouble, leucorrhœa, irregular or painful "monthly periods." I am sure it is our best friend.

I am so thankful to Mrs. Pinkham for the good she has done me, that I wish every sick woman in America would write to her at Lynn, Mass., and get her advice."

PLAINFIELD WOMEN.

Unworthy Habits of Haste Among Them.

MANY WHO SEEM TO BE ACTING A FOOLISH PART.

Are Not Satisfied by Going About Quietly.

THEY HURRY AND WORRY, THEN DON'T GET SLEEP.

Paine's Celery Compound Their Best Relief.

In prescribing Paine's celery compound for a patient the other day a Plainfield physician, who is a specialist in nervous difficulties, declared that there were thousands of such women who were literally killing themselves by too rapid movements.

"They are not satisfied," said he, "with going about doing things in a quiet, ordinary way but rush, through with their work and ruin their health as fast as they can. So firmly fixed is this habit that they run up and down stairs when there is no need for hurry.

"They not only rush but hurry, and between these two, subject their nervous systems to more wear and tear than anything short of wrought steel could endure."

Whatever the cause, our women, our young girls and even business men are rapidly growing more and more nervous. Prof. Phelps, the great Dartmouth scientist, saw this alarming state of things and concentrated all his energy to remedying it. It was from the formula of this eminent student and thinker that Paine's celery compound was prepared.

Its success in restoring nerve strength and building up the worn out body repaid the years of study and investigation that Prof. Phelps conscientiously devoted to the diseases of the stomach and the kidneys, the result of impure blood and impoverished nerves. The astonishing results that have come from its careful use have been the subject of discussion in all the prominent newspaper and magazines in this country, Canada and throughout Great Britain.

The record of this great blood cleanser, from the time of its discovery up to the present day, has been a marvelous one.

It has cured literally thousands of cases of nervous debility, rheumatism kidney and heart troubles and has made sound sleep possible to countless men and women whose irritable and impoverished nerves were slowly draining them of vitality.

WANT AND PRIVATION

Hocking Valley Mine Workers Starving.

Once Prosperous Villages Now in Need of Aid—Suggestions That Permanent Relief Stations Be Provided—Gov. McKinley Will Be Appealed To for Help.

Columbus, O., Jan. 12.—The disclosures of the destitute condition of the miners in and about Nelsonville, made first by the United Press last Thursday morning, may have the effect of measures being taken to establish permanent relief stations.

Many plans have already been suggested looking to that end and precedents are pointed to for the purpose of providing the feasibility of the plans suggested.

Operators freely admit that they lose at least five cents on every ton of coal shipped out of the Hocking Valley, and for this they blame the excessive freight rates, the miners and the Pennsylvania operators.

Just how this deplorable condition of affairs is to be remedied cannot be foretold, but some definite action will probably be taken at the annual convention of the United Mine Workers of America which will convene here on Feb. 12.

The suggestion which seems to meet with most approval, however, and which is most generally discussed, and especially among the miners, is the co-operative scheme which has been adopted by the Shawnee miners. It is generally conceded that the co-operative system on the terms the Shawnee miners have adopted bodes evil for the miners in the Pittsburg district, but at present the Hocking Valley miners seem to be looking out only for themselves, and to do that successfully they have a big job on their hands. The circumstances which brought about the present condition of affairs—the disregard of the Pennsylvania operators of the differential of nine cents—are almost wholly ignored, and when the question is asked why the miners do not accept a reduction and thus enable the Hocking Valley operators to operate their mines and compete with Pennsylvania in the lake trade, many of the operators answer by saying it is too late to think of that now as all the big contracts for the year have been made, and none of them came to the Hocking Valley.

Another statement which is unhesitatingly made is that even if the miners were willing to go into the mines for 40 cents a ton, no more could be used than is being mined at present at 60 cents. They claim that the competitive field is entirely closed to them.

There is no material difference between th condition of affairs existing in the Hocking Valley and those in the Sunday Creek Valley. In the latter all the mines are practically idle—only a few miners being at work—and a mass meeting has been called at Gloucester to-day for the purpose of formulating plans to relieve the needy. While the destitution in the Hocking Valley has absorbed the attention of the general public the conditions in the case of the Sunday Creek Valley have been ignored probably because they were not generally known. If possible the privations in this valley exceed in severity those in the Hocking Valley especially in the Buckingham district, where the greatest suffering seems to exist and where scenes of destitution are almost indescribable and also incredible. A committee will be appointed and sent to Columbus to ask the governor for aid, and Glouster will be made the distributing point.

At Corning, a large meeting of business men, miners and other laborers was held yesterday to make a united appeal to the governor for aid. At this meeting Mr. Coleman, president of the Miners' union at Nelsonville, said:

"The condition is deplorable, and hundreds of men, women and children are on the verge of starvation. The miners demand labor in preference to charity and they petitioned the operators for a division of even the half loaf, but were refused."

Proper steps were taken for securing relief.

The vicinity of Jacksonville, a year ago was a prosperous district, but now a majority of the people are starving.

Gov. McKinley late last night received a telegram from Attorney Coultrap of McArthur, Vinton county, who had been requested to ascertain the extent of suffering among miners in the Hocking Valley.

Mr. Coultrap stated that he had been unable to ascertain the full extent of the destitution, but he had learned enough to warrant the sending of another carload of shoes, clothing and provisions into the valley at once. This will be sent to-day.

A gentleman who arrived here from the destitute district says he made a pretty extensive tour of the district and that the published accounts have not been exaggerated. He says in many families there was not a shoe in the house, and hardly enough clothing to cover nakedness.

Will Not Remove Headquarters.

IN THE TRADE WORLD

Prospects for the Near Future Fairly Good.

Weather Conditions in the East Interfere with Business—Production of Iron and Steel in Excess of Demand—Favorable Showing in the Prices of Staples.

New York, Jan. 12.—Bradstreet's in a review of the state of trade says: The second week of the new year brings few reports of an increasing volume of orders for seasonable goods. Weather conditions in the east have been unfavorable, those west and south the reverse.

Chicago, St. Louis, Boston, New York and Philadelphia report relatively great improvement, with increased orders for dry goods, clothing, rubbers, shoes, hardware and woolen dress goods. At some centers it is too early to judge of the outlook for trade. Travelers in many instances have not all gone out. Western furniture manufacturers are stocking up, which has had an influence on the hardware trade, and western dealers in iron and steel expect increased orders by February 1. Production of iron and steel is going on in excess of demand, but manufacturers expect that necessary repairs, renewals and additions to plants by railroad companies, car manufacturers and other industrial enterprises will have a stimulating influence in the near future.

A feature among jobbers in Philadelphia and Boston has been the extent to which sales of dry goods and shoes have been pushed. Prints and ginghams have been opened and new orders are freely received. Foreign woolen dress goods are active, going to all parts of the country. Not a few orders are already received. This has had a quieting effect on demand for domestic dress woolens. Woolen mills, while fairly busy on first orders, are in the market for wool only to cover contracts.

On the Pacific coast trade at most larger cities is quiet. At San Francisco almost constant rains have intensified dullness, and the certainty of a large crop of wheat depresses quotations for that cereal. At Portland, Ore., merchants announce an improvement in business, due to a revival in demand from the interior.

Total bank clearings throughout the United States for six business days ended with January 10, amount to $1,039,000,000, an increase of 9.4 per cent over the total for the previous week in January, 1894. When compared with the corresponding week in the panic year 1893, four months before the panic appeared, the past week's total shows a decrease of 24 per cent., and contrasted with the like total in 1892, a falling off of 26 per cent. This comparatively favorable showing is reinforced by the course of prices of staples, as quotations for hides have been working higher, while those for wheat, Indian corn, pork, lard, coffee, cotton, and plate glass have all been marked up. Prices for shoes, leather, coal, lumber, naval stores, rice, sugar, tobacco, and live cattle have been held firmly. Cruder forms of iron and steel are no lower, but are weak. Neither is wool lower, but it is flat at the lowest quotation known, while prices for oats and for live hogs have declined. There are 405 business failures reported throughout the United States this week, compared with 373 last week, 484 in the week a year ago, 301 two years ago and 379 three years ago.

DIRTY STREETS THE CAUSE.

Prevalence of Grip in New York Attributed To Their Condition.

New York, Jan. 12.—Health Commissioner Dr. Cyrus Edson, said that he considered the prevalence of grip to the filthy condition of the streets and tenements.

"If these conditions continue," he said, "and the temperature rises above sixty degrees as it frequently does in January, why the result will be disastrous. I don't mean to attribute the original presence of grip to dirty streets; the disease exists all over the country. But the filthy condition of things is largely responsible for the manner in which it is spreading."

Washington, Jan. 12.—Three of the discharged employes of the New York city postoffice have complained to the civil service commission that their dismissals were unjust and was done without cause. They claim to have been efficient and faithful clerks but do not assign political reasons for their discharges. The civil service commission has forwarded their complaints to the first assistant postmaster general for consideration.

Gave the Bank People a Scare.

Kansas City, Kan., Jan. 12.—There was consternation in the Kansas State bank yesterday when August Elisner, an avowed anarchist, pulled three pieces of bar iron from his pocket and threw them through the plate glass windows from the sidewalk in front of the bank. The bars were mistaken for dynamite. At the police station Elisner said he sought that method to get arrested for shelter and food.

FIGHTING INCOME TAX

Senator Hill Assails It in a Long Speech.

Supported in the Main by Mr. Sherman—Senator Quay's Motion to Postpone Further Consideration Defeated—Court of Claims Bills Discussed in the House.

Washington, Jan. 12.—The debate in the senate on the subject of the income tax occupied the better part of five hours. Most of that time was used by Mr. Hill (dem., N. Y.) in advocacy of the amendment offered by him, the preceding day, giving courts of the United States jurisdiction to hear and determine suits to test the constitutionality and validity of the tax. He assailed the tax as unequal, ununiform, and unjust, and expressed his conviction that the senate would agree with him that the provision as it now stood was unconstitutional, unwieldy and unworkable, and that it ought not to be inflicted on the tax payers, the executive officer, or congress.

Mr. Sherman (rep., O.) said that, in the main, he agreed with the senator in regard to the tax; but he held that a refusal by the senate to appropriate money to carry it out would tend to overthrow the principles on which the government is established, and would be particularly wrong in regard to a revenue which the senate had no power to originate.

Speeches were also made by Mr. Dubois (rep., Ida.), Mr. Quay (rep., Pa.) and Mr. Mitchell (rep., Ore.)

A motion by Mr. Quay to postpone the further consideration of the bill and amendment till the first Monday in February received one vote, (his own) in its favor, and 43 against it. A point of order was made against the Hill amendment, (that it was general legislation on a general appropriation bill) and was sustained by the presiding officer (Mr. Faulkner, (dem., W. Va.) An appeal from this ruling was taken by Mr. Hill, and at that stage of the proceedings, the whole matter went over until to-day. Two financial bills were introduced, one by Mr. Vest (dem., Mo.), to substitute for the treasury notes and gold and silver certificates, notes of equal amount payable "in gold and silver coin of the United States" and one by Mr. McPherson (dem., N. J.), authorizing the issue and sale of bonds. The senate at 5:20 adjourned until to-day.

House Proceedings.

Under the rules of the house the day was private bill day, and three hours were spent in an unavailing consideration, in committee of the whole, of a bill that enjoyed the attention of the body on the day last devoted to the private calendar in July, 1894. It was for the payment of $13,000 for stores and supplies from a loyal Tennesseean in the war, as adjudged by the court of claims. The bill elicited a discussion of the general policy of congress with respect of these bills and Mr. Boatner (dem., La.,) said that if it was the intention to pay none of them, the sooner that fact was known the better it would be for the peace of mind of the representatives from the southern states.

Mr. Cockrell (dem., Tex.) said he had no request to make of the conquerers on account of claim advanced by men who estblished their loyalty to the government thirty years after the war ended.

Mr. Dockery (dem., Mo.) said hat for himself, he would repeal the Bowman and Tucker acts; abolish the committee on war claims and declare the war closed.

No action was had upon the bill. Upon recommendation of the committee of the whole the house laid on the table the bill to remit to the contractors for building the dynamite cruiser Vesuvius the penalties imposed for delay in her construction.

Under unanimous consent a number of important bills were passed.

Mr. Dingley's substitute for the bill reported by the committee on merchant marine and fisheries,, relating to the appointment and duties of shipping commissioners was passed; also the committee's bill increasing from $100 to $1,000 a day the penalty for the violation of the law for the protection of the salmon fisheries for Alaska, and directing the appointment of inspectors to see that the law is enforced.

Moonshiner and Officer Killed.

Columbia, S. C., Jan. 12.—A special from Walhalla, S. C., says: Robert Moore, a revenue officer and Robert T. Thrift, a moonshiner, shot and killed each other. Thrift was arrested last night by Moore for running an illicit distillery and was being taken to Walhalla to be placed in jail. Thrift tried to escape by shooting Moore, who returned the fire. Each shot struck a vital part, and both men died in a few minutes.

Mr. Pierce was 53 years old. For thirty years he has been connected with the Grand Trunk Railway company, and for the past twenty years he has acted as city ticket agent at this point.

for Infants and Children.

MOTHERS, Do You Know that Paregoric, Bateman's Drops, Godfrey's Cordial, many so-called Soothing Syrups, and most remedies for children are composed of opium or morphine?

Do You Know that opium and morphine are stupefying narcotic poisons?

Do You Know that in most countries druggists are not permitted to sell narcotics without labeling them poisons?

Do You Know that you should not permit any medicine to be given your child unless you or your physician know of what it is composed?

Do You Know that Castoria is a purely vegetable preparation, and that a list of its ingredients is published with every bottle?

Do You Know that Castoria is the prescription of the famous Dr. Samuel Pitcher. That it has been in use for nearly thirty years, and that more Castoria is now sold than of all other remedies for children combined?

Do You Know that the Patent Office Department of the United States, and of other countries, have issued exclusive right to Dr. Pitcher and his assigns to use the word "Castoria" and its formula, and that to imitate them is a state prison offense?

Do You Know that one of the reasons for granting this government protection was because Castoria had been proven to be absolutely harmless?

Do You Know that 35 average doses of Castoria are furnished for 35 cents, or one cent a dose?

Do You Know that when possessed of this perfect preparation, your children may be kept well, and that you may have unbroken rest?

Well, these things are worth knowing. They are facts.

CHAPTER II—CONTINUED

For before the duke died, after he had refused the friendship of the emperor and had confronted his hostility, and had returned with his wife and child and the people of his court to the old residence on the Atlantic shores, it was with fortunes sadly impoverished by the reckless expenditure with which he had promoted the legitimist issues while relying on success and ultimate repayment. During the duke's subsequent illness innumerable wrongs were done his estates, winked at by authority, and never reported to the central powers. Undertakings into which the duke had allowed himself to be drawn, in the fever of adventure belonging to the era, came to nothing—perhaps at an imperial frown. Banking houses failed, factors retained funds, government seized here, landslides destroyed vineyards there; and in the time of the first seclusion of the duchess, after her widowhood, robberies right and left, public and private, dispossessed her of vast resources. When she attempted to look into matters for herself, she was little wiser than before; but she discovered that she must dismiss her ladies and the gentlemen of her household and live as she understood lesser nobles, or even quite plain people, lived. Her one faithful friend remained with her, her adviser and the boy's tutor. That he was a physician of note she thought fortunate, for the boy's sake; she did not know of how much note, sent for and consulted with by the greatest. She never knew the sacrifice of station and income he made by remaining with her. But it was necessary, even had it been contrary to his inclination, for M. Etienne was also to some extent a man of affairs, and even the little that was left had been rescued by him. The greater part of the chateau was closed, to go slowly to decay. What did she and her boy want more than few rooms and simple fare? With only the servants that were indispensable and in ways she knew as a girl at home with her father she took up life again, at once too proud and too humiliated to expose her condition to old friends—one by one those old friends, themselves in grief or seclusion, or exiled with one or the other of the unacknowledged kings to whom they gave allegiance, disappearing from the face of the earth.

But none the less was she a duchess of the Sarazines Beauxlieux. None the less was her son the duke. And apart from her absorbing love as his mother, she had an adoring veneration for him as the last of the Sarazines Beauxlieux.

"You will remember," she said to the child, holding his hand as she sat beside his bed at night—she had not been able to delegate this delight even when service was abundant, and formality triumphant, although she half feared it was a survival of that peasant strain in her again. "You will not forget, Beauxlieux, even in your sleep you will not forget who you are."

"How is i tthat I can forget?" asked the child. "Do not all children remember themselves?"

"All children!" said the mother. "There is only one Beauxlieux! And it is that which you must recall. All that it means, all that the Beauxlieux have been since the beginning of the world."

"Were we there then?"

The question gave her pause. "The strongest, the bravest, the best, came early to their own, Beauxlieux," she said then. "And in that, it signifies to you that in your veins flows the last best drop of their blood, and you can never be anything but as strong, as brave, as best, as they."

"Well, mamma, it is that I will try," said the child dreamily, and contentedly folding both little hands over hers, as he fell asleep.

"You will not try," she said. "You will be."

At another time, after she had seen him conduct himself too masterfully

"I AM NOT A KING, MOTHER."

towards two little lads he had come across in the forest, she reminded him that he was not the Duke des Sarazines Beauxlieux for his own pleasure. "It would be an injustice on the part of Heaven," she said, as they sat in the firelight, "if a king were a king for his own happiness. He is a king because he is fit to rule, because he can care for his subjects better than they can care for themselves, because he is great and generous, and the good God trusts to him the lives and happiness and honor of his people. A great trust, Beauxlieux, a vast responsibility."

"I am not a king, mamma."

"No? But you are a duke, a leader."

"Then, my mother," said Beauxlieux, "although they may not be my people, yet there are Jean and Pierre—and there are my books and M. Etienne—if they shared with me."

"In your instruction? I do not know," said the duchess, retreating into her fortress of haughtiness. "I will think of it. Still they are two souls—to let in the light on them—I will speak of it with monsieur."

And thus through confiscation and wrong and ruin the duchess kept the idea of greatness, and moved with a dignity becoming it.

And let come what privation would the Beauxlieux diamonds remained in her possession. If anyone in the outside world thought of them at all, it was supposed they had gone with the rest of the vast properties. But they reposed still in their cases within the iron strong box, in a secret place of her own apartments. And every few years, on the evening of some birthday of the young duke, she opened their receptacle and saw the great live things shining at her, and they seemed to her the embodiment and expression of all the old and rightful Beauxlieux splendor.

The poor duchess had no new dresses; but her faithful Olympe kept her clothed from the almost boundless resources of her former wardrobe, according to the rumor of the modes that reached them. And she would have some garment put on, the shimmer of whose luster was softened by the cobwebs of the ancient lace belonging to the ladies of Beauxlieux, and with the largest of the diamonds around her throat and on her hair, would sail down the grand staircase to the salon, where the young duke, and monsieur, his tutor, awaited her, as resplendent, as stately, as beautiful as a goddess. At least so it seemed not only to Jean and Pierre, who, according to Beauxlieux' request, and on monsieur's advice, had been admitted to share the young duke's studies, Pierre's eyes opening as if the riches of the earth suddenly blazed upon him, but Jean feeling as if a queen of Heaven were no lovelier or no more fittingly adorned, but to her son also who felt, in her presence, scarcely the need of Heaven, and to M. Etienne who never, by so much as a glance, said what he felt.

CHAPTER III

Life went on then at the chateau in a still and peaceful manner, and, living only like a gentlewoman of most restricted means, perhaps the duchess did not really know how happy she was. Frequently M. Etienne went away for a brief while to Bordeaux, to London, to Paris and back, sometimes to assist at an operation, sometimes on consultation. The poor duchess, who had once only to express a wish and it seemed as if the forces of nature fell in line to grant it, did not know that practically the greater part of the money spent in the household was that brought home by M. Etienne, and after those journeys—M. Etienne, who could have commanded fortunes had he not chosen rather to remain the protector of her and of her child. Seldom anything broke the tranquil monotony. Once Beauxlieux was nearly drowned, and the joy of his revival was more than joy could have been at the restoration of power and wealth. Once Jean broke his leg and the monsieur set it, and the duchess tended him, the little fair-haired fellow with his appealing face, as if he had been her own, and he loved them as a dog might love them, or rather as a slave who had still the memory of his own tribe and cabins. As for little Pierre, nothing ever happened to him; he kept himself out of every trouble; he was always brought in innocent from every scrape; you might suspect him, but you could never bring the mischief home to him. Victorine, the half niece of Olympe, who had been brought to the chateau at the wish of madame, when the child's parents died, was Pierre's able abettor; and many a time did Jean suffer in silence a reprimand for the fault of those two impish things. But Victorine was very pretty and little and tender, and if Pierre could connect her with his misdemeanors, he knew he was safe from betrayal from Beauxlieux and from Jean. The duchess liked to see Victorine's pretty youth and brightness about her, thinking of no possible consequences, and had her taught by Olympe to rip and sew and dress hair; and then, in the motherliness of her nature, and because there were no daughters of neighboring seigneurs, as in old times, to be taught the fine arts of home, she would have her an hour or two a day with herself in the morning, leading her into the mysteries of lacemaking and embroidery, of water-color painting, reading history and poems, greatly to Olympe's ill-concealed joy. Sometimes Duchesse des Sarazines Beauxlieux smiled to herself, a little bitterly, to think that the niece of her serving-woman, and the children of a charcoal burner and of a fisherman should be the half of her household.

But while her son grew and increased in stature and strength and in all the finer and nobler aspects of his being, the duchess asked no more. Under M. Etienne's care his scholarship was all that could be wished; and in the matter of physical accomplishment the tall, lithe stripling fenced and boxed and rode and shot with the best; and his mother thought with fond pride how well he would take his place and part when he should be called to it.

Occasionally now the monsieur took Beauxlieux with him on his journeys to Paris or elsewhere, and his mother was satisfied that he should first see the world, and perhaps what is called life, with M. Etienne beside him. They made no use of his title, however, then. "It would be absurd," said Beauxlieux, "without a sou, so to say, in one's pocket." But he was aware that that was something not to dwell on before the duchess. When he came home he had much to relate to her, and much to tell Jean and Pierre. On one occasion M. Etienne had taken him, as if he were his assistant, to a grand house, where a famous surgeon had requested the monsieur's help, and where Beauxlieux had at first been dazzled by wealth and then dazed with wonder. They had gone afterward in haste across Austria, on another occasion for M. Etienne's services, to a half savage Roumanian prince, where, owing to his incognito, Beauxlieux saw much of the life beneath the barbaric splendor, the Parisian surgeon leaving the case with M. Etienne, so that for several weeks Beauxlieux, among conditions of life of which he had had no conception, found himself, unaware, in his leisure as M. Etienne's superfluous attendant, studying them, getting a close interest in the people of the forest, on the mountain, in the cabins clustered in the midst of the vast farms. "It is right," said M. Etienne, when he spoke to him of his observations and his wonder, "that your grace should know what goes on in the world, how the greater part of our fellow creatures live and suffer. For it may some day be the part of the Duke des Sarazines Beauxlieux to bring them relief."

When the patient in his care could be left, M. Etienne took Beauxlieux with him farther east, and he was approaching his twenty-first year when he returned, a traveled man, to the old chateau.

CHAPTER III—CONTINUED.

The days were long to the duchess while her son and the monsieur were away. She busied herself and Victorine at their embroidery, at their books. She walked beside the sea in the latter part of the day, a slight, swift figure wrapped in a long cloak, looking over the gray and melancholy waste, restless herself as those dreamy waters were—longing for her boy, distrusting and fearing the future, yet soothed when she thought of the strong arm of M. Etienne, on which, whether near or far, she leaned. In the evening Pierre tinkered at the barrel of the music box, having a knack of tinkering, or perhaps Jean read to them by the firelight which illuminated the dark salon, he lying on the skin beside the hearth, whose logs he and Pierre had helped to bring in from the forest, or reading, not by any means the news of the day—madame would have none of that now—more frequently old romances of derring-doe.

When Beauxlieux came home with the story of his adventures it was Pierre's eyes that opened at the mention of palaces and great houses, and he demanded even more particulars than had struck Beauxlieux' sight. It was Jean who asked about the people upholding the structure of the great households on their shoulders. Jean himself had been away on foot, more than once now—no one knew where. But even the duchess had seen the light on his face sometimes when coming back.

"I shall have a dwelling such as one of those," said Pierre. "I shall house my wife in a palace. I go to Paris to make my fortune."

"You like then this rotten splendor," cried the deep voice of Beauxlieux, from the shadow where he sat by the duchess on the other side of the wide hearth. "Alas! It is only the scum on a sea of filth and iniquity. That laughter of the people who float over it—I hear through it only the groan of the people who produce it!"

"I shall not search too deeply," said Pierre. "One man cannot reform the world. Let me take the best of it while it is going—money, jewels, houses, horses—"

"And you call that the best? Money wrung out of sweat? Idle glitter of jewels while others have scarcely rags? Houses that are gilded seraglios, while there are men and women sleeping on wattles of straw"—

"It will not be my fault," said Pierre, "that they sleep on straw. Pshaw! When I am rich I shall not keep it all to myself. I shall take pleasure in giving—"

"He has read of Alnaschar," said Jean.

"In giving!" cried Beauxlieux. "There is no giving! It is theirs! It is their labor, their lives, their deprivation, their want, their suffering, that made all this money; no matter how you come by it. It is theirs! You can give them nothing. You can only restore in part."

"What puzzles me," said Jean, "is how these others can think that they love the good God, and, knowing that He loves all men, be willing to wrong any man. No, no, when I recollect the story of Jesus, that He died for men, I have felt myself unwilling to accept the sacrifice. I have felt that I, too, must surrender myself, if not to die, then to live for men. Never for myself, only for them."

"Oh, Jean!" cried Beauxlieux, clasping his hand. "And I shall live with you!"

"I suppose Jean is going to be a priest?" said the pretty Victorine, with a little insolent shrug.

"Not of any church, Victorine," said Jean. "I shall not need to be blessed of the apostolic succession in order to carry hope into dungeons."

"Oh, you make me cold at the heart of me!" cried Victorine.

Beauxlieux had now set himself seriously at work to learn the profession in which M. Etienne was so accomplished. He was not one under any circumstances to be idle. His mother had not wished this study, however; she would have him wait, even if it were in poverty, preserving his nobility, till the government should give him his own again. But the hated empire had fallen, and it had been replaced by the even more hated republic. That had not signified greatly to her; it was never "France" to her, it was always "My son." But now even Henry V. was dead. "There is no more hope," M. Etienne had declared. "Let his grace do as he will." And it was M. Etienne who found the means for Beauxlieux to go to Paris and finish his undertaking. His mother had some dim idea that all things were open to him as his father's son, as the last of his exalted name; she had no idea whatever that the name now was remembered only as a matter of history, nor that in Paris the young duke was known simply as Beauxlieux, a student of promise from a southwestern department.

It was on his twenty-first birthday that his mother formally made over to him his possessions. He was a little sad about it—not that the chateau was a ruin, the forest so thin, the fields so few and bare, but that his mother should break her heart over these affairs. For himself, he was full of strength and hope, and nothing mattered since he was well and was alive, since he had M. Etienne and Jean; since, above all, he had his mother.

His mother, not yet in her fortieth year, was still beautiful, her hair black as the raven's wing, her dark clear skin as smooth as a girl's, her eyes glowing as the midnight stars, her smile heartwarming. As she stood in the warm light, for Olympe had candles in every sconce, wearing that pale primrose satin of more than twenty years ago, covered now with black lace of a far greater age, almost wrapped in the glow of the Beauxlieux diamonds, as in a cloud of brightness, preserving all the sweet and stately grace of her first youth, she was still a sight to make a man's heart tremble. She seemed to beam and sparkle as she walked, her every movement shedding a stream of light; and Jean himself did not find it possible to envy her in his heart that night the possession of the diamonds, that they might be sold and their price given to the poor. As for her, it would as soon have occurred to her to sell herself as those stones, which were a part of the insignia of the family magnificence.

She put off the air of gentle melancholy which she usually wore, but which was a remnant of old manner rather than an indication of present feeling, and made them gay with her gayety. She talked with Jean of Beauxlieux, her son, and his future, with M. Etienne of his great cases, with Pierre of his hopes—Pierre had had a year in Paris now. She danced with Beauxlieux to tunes of the music box. She even danced down the long room with M. Etienne, once, but no more, a sort of shiver making her fall on the cushions of the bench in the big window there, and she closed the evening by singing at the piano, which Jean kept in tune, a little chanson, that was as proper to her voice as fragrance is to the rose. When she embraced her son, and bade them all good-night, and swept through the door that M. Etienne held open for her, they felt as if after all in her grace and majesty there were the traits of a divine right to power, that something like a superior being had been with them.

And later, as she sat under Olympe's hands, the pretty Victorine taking the jewels as they were unclasped, the duchess thought, with a sort of sacred joy, of the time when she should give these jewels to Beauxlieux' wife—an Orleans princess, it might be; who knew? That family had the wealth required, but the Sarazines Beauxlieux name and blood was the older and the nobler. And she smiled unconsciously and sweetly on the girl whose forwardness had of late needed repression, and had made the duchess doubt her wisdom in taking the three low-born children into her life, through pity for Beauxlieux' solitude at a time when the safety of what was left to them lay in being forgotten. And taking from her jewel box a thread of gold holding a heart of pearls, she hung it on the girl's neck, so that no one might fail of happiness on the day that Beauxlieux, even though it were but fanciful vision, with no tangible reality, came to his rights as the first peer of France.

CHAPTER IV.

Beauxlieux was walking late that night on the stone terrace flooded with moonlight. On one side the sea, not far away, swelled like the curve of some silver shield and cast its own luster back upon the sky and filled the night with the soft music of its murmur. On the other side he saw the old chateau, covered with vines, full of deep-set shadows.

"Voyez vous pendre au flanc de la colline Ces murs, ces tours, cette vaste ruine?"

he repeated as he walked.

"Aux temps passes une bruyante cour
Retentissait douce ce muet sejour,
Il fut peuple de heroes et de belles,
Il entendit aux nobles demoiselles,
Les chevaliers chanter des lois d'amour."

And just then he saw two shadows hurrying down the arcade of the long disused chapel cloister, disused, since, when she had reorganized her household on the basis of comparative poverty, the duchess had suffered the abbe to go, accepting in his stead the offices of the village priest. "Ah, well," Beauxlieux said, a gentle smile following the shadows, "the love of the noble demoiselle and the chevalier is no better worth than the love of Pierre and Victorine. And this may help to strike the balance with all that other, the loves, the luxury of that bruyante cour. Can it take less than the life time of centuries of Beauxlieux to restore to the people all of which that bruyante cour, and such as that, has robbed them?"

For he had already another point of view than that of his mother, who, believing it the duty of nobles to hold their people in charge and provide for their happiness, was confident that the Beauxlieux could never have done otherwise. And he went back to his thoughts, which were now full of somber feeling and now of joyous hope.

While at his studies in Paris Beauxlieux had penetrated the hidden side of life; he had seen sights that made him shudder again as he spoke of them to Jean. And in recalling these journeys with M. Etienne as far as the Caucasus, he forgot the palaces, the galeries, the lovely women, the stupendous fortifications, the grim soldiery, all he had seen, except the squalor, the crime, the poverty. He was going back to Paris now to finish his medical studies; he would write every day to Jean, he would see Pierre frequently enough—but Pierre's outlook on life was already totally at variance with his and Jean's. Moreover, Pierre meant to be a money maker; and their contention was to destroy money. "It is the first evil," he said, as he walked, looking across the lawn, that long ago had been filled in where once the moat gathered its waters, and, into the edge of the overgrown park, where a hare bounded across the open space. And suddenly something smote his vision like a blaze of glory and was gone again, shining, shapeless, a moonbeam cleaving the foam wreath of a cascade, an apparition of glittering mist, a white ghost of the old magnificences come back to look upon the scene with him. For a moment the thought flashed on him that it was some masquerading play of Victorine's, and then it had vanished so instantly, that it knew it for an illusion of his eyes, of his brain, tired with thinking and raring and sorrowing for sorrows he could not heal. And so he left the night and moonlight, and the cold unquiet sea, and went to his slumbers.

"AND IT WAS WE WHO MADE THEM SO."

There had been a brief season of gayety in the first year after Beauxlieux' majority, when Pierre, who reported himself as doing finely, came home to marry Victorine, whose hand he had asked of the duchess, a wedding which took a great load off the mind of Olympe, since she knew the wiles of Victorine, and the charm of being Duchess des Sarazines Beauxlieux, even in a republic, where it might be little more than being a duchess of rag fair. She had not chanced to hear Pierre say to Victorine that night in the wood: "I will make you Duchess des Beaulieux yet!"

More than once in the two years' time, Beauxlieux had run down to the chateau for a sight of his mother, for a fresh trip with Jean, no one knew where, but from which he came back with an air, one could not declare were it more of sadness or of proud determination. "I have been eating black bread," he would say in answer to his mother's inquiry. "I have been among my brothers. There is so much to do. They have not only to be helped, they have first to be taught that they need the help. They are in the dark; they do not even grope; they do not know that there is any light. They suffer so. They are so patient. Some of them, my mother, seem like beasts of the field. And it is we who have made them so!" he cried, springing to his feet. "It is the weight of our splendor that has crushed them into earth."

"Our splendor!" said his mother, bitterly.

"The splendor," with a wild gesture, "that, thank God, is ours no more!"

"My child! Beauxlieux!"

"Sometimes," he said, "when I am with them, my heart swells as if it would burst. I feel the very singing of the poor blood in their veins. It would not be so poor had mine not been too rich! We have trodden them down so long, they have been so herded, so outraged, so cowed, so starved, their souls impoverished as their bodies—my God! We have lived on their labor, our wealth is their sweat, our thrones are planted on their slaughter! Often when I have seen the great carriages driven along the Bois, the high stepping horses in their golden harnesses, the women, rosy, round, their silks overflowing like petals of great flowers, the sight of them has made me tremble, I have felt the wheels of those carriages rolling through blood!"

A BRILLIANT SOCIAL.

THE PARK CLUB PROVIDE ENTERTAINMENT FOR THEMSELVES AND FRIENDS.

Miss Jackson and Mr. Conde's Symphony Orchestra Enthusiastically Received — Club Events in the Immediate Future.

The Park Club Saturday evening entertainment and social, than which no affair given by this lively organization has been more pleasing or successful, called together fully two hundred members and friends, who thoroughly enjoyed the literary and musical feast offered by Miss Addie Parker Jackson and P. Ludwig Conde's Young Men's Symphony Orchestra.

Counselor Charles A. Reed was master of ceremonies, and after a pleasant word of welcome announced a dramatic overture by the orchestra which was received with so hearty an encore that they were forced to respond with "The Musical Dream".

Miss Jackson was next introduced, and rendered "Home, Sweet Home", a serio-comic selection which gave full scope to the sweetly modulated voice and finished gesture of the fair artist, who was greeted at the close with round upon round of well merited applause, auricular evidence of the pleasure depicted on the smiling features of the assembly. Miss Jackson graciously responded with a dramatic rendition of "The Deed", which describes a stern visaged man who stands with keen-edged knife in upraised hand near his little children and steps forward to cut them two pieces—of bread. In this selection Miss Jackson also had ample chance to test her ability, and most enjoyably did she improve the opportunity, receiving as she closed a heartier ovation even than before. A Concert Gavotte was then given in a most excellent manner by the orchestra, which, bye-the-bye, consisted of Messrs. Davis, Mills and Lovell, first violin, Messrs. Hillman and MacKillop, second violin, Mr. Ferrer, 'cello, Mr. Serrell, flute, Mr. McGee, cornet, accompanied by Mr. Raynolds on the piano, not forgetting the genial Mr. Conde himself, who played and directed at the same time.

Counselor Reed's announcement that Miss Jackson would again favor was received with loud applause by the audience, and she recited "The Little Cupid", a happy combination of picnic, green trees, country lover, polished city chap, and pretty girl, before whom appears just at the proper moment the prattling, rosy-cheeked child of the party who innocently acts as Cupid's messenger.

To the encore which followed this pleasing effort, Miss Jackson responded with the laughable "Serenade", given by special request, nor was she allowed to take her seat until she had again favored with a humorous account of a young woman's ignorance of the French language, which caused her to turn her cherry lips toward her vis-a-vis and say "Billet doux"—"and William did".

As the laughter subsided, the orchestra rendered the beautiful "Egyptian Midnight Parade", which difficult selection was most excellently and artistically executed by the young men, who, in response to the generous and merited applause, gave a still more difficult march, which fittingly closed that part of the evening's entertainment, although the audience were anticipating a solo from the modest Mr. Conde.

The assembly broke up to gather round the tables in pursuance of Counselor Reed's suggestion, "To watch President McCutchen try to play billiards", which attempt, by the way, was a brilliant and almost invariably successful "trial"; to assemble at the alleys and watch the athletic ball-twirlers mow down the pins; to partake of the delicious coffee; or, standing in groups on the ball-room floor, to engage in pleasant chat for a moment before joining in the mazy dance which followed to the excellent piano music of William Runyon, who afterward sang for the happy party.

Throughout the evening that freedom from restraint which is one of the secrets of the great popularity of the Park Club socials, was everywhere remarked, member and guest alike going on the good old principle of having a good time.

On the bulletin is the whist game of next Saturday afternoon between the Parks and the Montgomerys of Jersey City, in the card rooms of the home club. The Parks have won three games and lost one, while the Montgomery Club hold a record of four straight victories, and it is confidently hoped that this game will result in a 4-1 score for both clubs. Every Tuesday evening is "whist night" at the club, and "Ladies nights" occur every other week. At the next "Ladies night" compass whist, which was so much enjoyed on a former occasion at the club, will again be introduced.

Among the bowling enthusiasts the game of next Thursday evening between the Parks and the Oritanis of Hackensack on the Hackensack alleys, is looked forward to with much interest.

Equally successful as entertainers, whist players, on the alleys, or the billiard tables, the popular and jolly Parks are indeed hard to beat.

A STAG SURPRISE.

Under-Sheriff Miller Receives a Distinguished Visitation, and Is Given Means to Make His Light Shine.

At his residence in Scotch Plains, Under-Sheriff L. W. Miller was completely surprised by being greeted on his return home about 8 Saturday evening.

Mrs. Miller, recollecting that day as being the bridegroom's birthday, quietly informed a few of his friends, in consequence of which Mr. Miller was detained by the Sheriff until the appointed hour.

Those present to greet and congratulate him were Sheriff Kyte, Freeholder F. W. Westcott, Mayor Abner P. Downer, Town Committeeman Wm. Terry, Assessor John Robison, Township Clerk Edward Hand and George Carter, who duly presented him with a magnificent parlor lamp, each in turn making an appropriate presentation speech. After the bounteous repast to which all were welcomed by Mrs. Miller, the gentlemen were left to their repast of reminiscences which were humorous and pathetic as the events of their long time acquaintanceship were launched forth. Each guest was the recipient of a beautifully decorated card as a memento of the happy occasion.

Mr. Miller, upon entering the house and being informed of the cause of the assemblage, quietly remarked, "Well! I remembered it, but I forgot it."

Rev. Dr. George R Van de Water and Rev. R. B. Fairbairn, of St. Stephen's College, were the officiating clergymen.

Dead Pictures in "A Baggage Check".

The laughable farce-comedy, "A Baggage Check", will be the attraction in Music Hall Wednesday night. The play contains many original ideas, with bright new music, catchy songs, and dances. The company is made up of well-known farce-comedy artists, principally among them the popular comedian, Mark Sullivan. Miss Sylvester Cornish, who lately has been singing contralto roles with the DeWolf Hopper Opera Company, is the prima donna. The balance of the cast contains clever people, who, with the author's many new ideas and funny situations, make up an excellent evening's entertainment, especially as there is a real novelty promised in the "Penier Family" in their marvelous presentation, "The Dead Pictures".

Midnight Fireworks.

At 1:12 yesterday morning the electric lights in The Daily Press office suddenly went out, and a loud report at the same moment prompted the base-ball editor to rush to the street in time to see a ball of fire playing between the broken ends of two wires which lay in the mud at the junction of Park and North avenues. Policeman Cooney stood guard over the wires to warn night owls, while Policeman Frederickson went to notify the engineer at the power station. The house circuit was immediately cut out, and a lineman despatched to clear the street of the dangerous wires.

Wind and rain had doubtless brought two wires together, causing a short circuit, which burned them through.

About 5:30 the damage was repaired, and the circuit again turned on.

The New Organist.

Frank J. Smith, the new organist of the Crescent Avenue Church, presided at the organ yesterday for the first time.

It was announced that Mr. Smith would form a chorus choir at once, meeting next Saturday afternoon to organize.

The choir which disbanded last year had the phenomenal record of a fifteen-year term of service, the leader during the entire period being Israel C. Pierson, and the solo soprano during nearly all the time was Mrs. J. Kirtland Myers.

MAYOR GILBERT TALKS.

THE DAILY PRESS ASKS HIM ABOUT LOCAL MATTERS.

Recommends Vitrified Brick Pavement for the Business Streets—Gives His Views on Rapid Transit and Police Force.

Referring to the wisdom of adopting a more durable pavement for Plainfield's business streets, in a recent interview kindly granted by Mayor Gilbert to a Daily Press representative, His Honor read section 17 of the original city charter granted in 1869, which permitted the Common Council to raise, in addition to the amount necessary for the maintenance of the poor, a sum not to exceed $10 000 for all other municipal expenditures, which of course prevented any attention being given to the turnpikes other than grading and rolling them. In 1874, however, an amendment to the charter increased the tax to 40 cents on each $100 assessed valuation, in lieu of all other tax levied or contemplated, and it was soon after possible to expend a portion of the additional city capital toward improving the condition of the roads. The MacAdam system was introduced, and has been in use until the present time wherever paving has been done in the city. Though forming an excellent roadbed, wherever light vehicles only are used, experience has demonstrated that it is a most expensive form of pavement for our business streets, where the constant heavy trucking leaves it in frequent need of repair. Realizing that the tearing up of the streets incident to the completion of the new sewerage system would be a most propitious time to agitate the needed improvement in paving, His Honor has given much time and thought to the matter during the past year, making in many instances personal investigation as to the merits of the various systems in practical use in various municipalities throughout the country. Believing that the Belgian block system is beyond the means as well as the requirements of our city, he is strongly impressed with the practicability and comparative cheapness in cost of the vitrified brick system now used extensively and laid by Engineer F. A. Dunham in cities of the South and West, as well as many cities throughout New York State.

"A very conservative estimate places its life at forty years,"—said the Mayor—"while many practical engineers place its life at a much higher figure. It is not apt to chip nor crack, as is the Belgian block; will wear more evenly, does not glaze with frost as readily; is not affected by changes of temperature as is asphalt; and can be laid in our streets at the aproximate cost of $1 50 per running foot, which is a figure much below the estimate of certain other systems."

While mathematical calculation would demonstrate the fact that it would be ultimately more economical to bond the indebtedness incurred by doing a large amount of this work at once, it is not and has never been the policy of Plainfield citizens to run into debt for municipal improvements, and it is therefore deemed advisable by His Honor that the work, when begun, should be carried on as was the macadamizing, section by section, using as large a portion as practicable of the present appropriation (which must not exceed one half of one per cent. assessed valuation), annually set aside.

As the $11,990 71 expended on our streets during 1894 was almost entirely for repairs, it will readily be seen that our present system involves a great drain on the city's resources, and brings but little lasting benefit.

With regard to the police force, Mayor Gilbert emphasized the great and immediate need of our city that the force should be increased, as the present department, comprising but eight regulars (besides the Chief) and three specials, who, however, are doing regular duty, is entirely too small to protect properly a city so extensive in area as is Plainfield.

Two officers are on duty during the day, and nine at night, and, though it speaks well for the morals of the community when so small a force can do as efficient work as has been done in the past, yet the urgent necessity remains of immediately augmenting the department by the addition of at least five to the present list of the city's guardians.

Questioned as to the accommodations of the present station house, His Honor expressed the belief that the suggestions embodied in his recent message touching the subject, would receive attention in the near future. Touching on the subject of the proposed much-needed extension of our rapid-transit system, the Mayor stated that while several parties had, at various times, appeared in the interests of surface railroad corporations, No effort had as yet been made towards securing a franchise, and it would seem probable that its present holders are not more anxious in view of the possible fact that they might eventually merge their road into the proposed electric system which, if completed, will extend from New York to Philadelphia.

Notwithstanding these possibilities, concluded Mayor Gilbert, there is no question that an extension of our local system would be of great benefit to the city.

PLAINFIELD'S TRAP-SHOOTING RECORDS OF THE YEAR.

Growth of the Sport in Popularity —Climax Gun Club to the Front.

The uninitiated have very little idea of the popularity of trap shooting in this county as a recreative pastime. In former years only large cities could boast of a gun club, but today there is hardly a village but what has a regularly organized club. It is safe to say there is more wealth among the fraternity, more capital invested, and more money spent annually by the sportsmen of America, than by any society that can be mentioned. The growth of the sport in the last few years, is phenomenal, and can be credited to the advent of the artifical target; these are discs, of a composition of clay and pitch, and are thrown from traps, thus taking the place of the living target, and as they can be thrown at a cost of a few cents they make an economical target.

Plainfield in former years held the honor of having, in the Middlesex Gun Club, the largest and most progressive gun club in America, and their tournaments did much to create a new interest in the sport that has been taken up all over the country. The Climax Gun Club is a worthy successor, and is fast coming to the front.

The tournament given here last Thursday and Friday was an evidence of the popularity of Plainfield among the trap shooting sportsmen. Over fifty notable marksmen from all over the country participated in the events of the meeting, notwithstanding that on the opening day a cold rain storm prevailed.

Among the crack shots present were: Rolla O Heicks of Dayton, Ohio, who holds the championship of artificial targets; J A R Elliot of Kansas City, America's live bird champion; O R Dickey of Boston, who is the recognized champion of New England; H G Wheeler of Marlborough and B Le Roy Woodward of Campello, Mass.; V D Kenerson and John T Mascroft of Worcester, Mass.; Bennett Bros., the famous pistol shots of Boston; W F Leadsley, the manufacturer of the famous Smokeless Wood Powder; W Fred Quimby, the distributor of the Empire target which is so universally used, and many others. That such an array of talent could be induced to attend, was extremely gratifying to the members of the Climax Club, and in the near future it is intended to give another tournament. The Climax Club hold regular monthly club competitions, the records of the members for the past year being given below. The great success of the club shoots is due to the fact that the weaker shooters are given liberal handicaps, which puts them on an equal footing with the cracks. The handicap used is known as the "Climax Handicap", and many gun clubs throughout the country have adopted it. At the first shoot of the new year which is to be held on Wednesday, the distribution of the prizes for 1894 will take place, and an election of officers. Those who have served for the past year, have been R. B. Manning, president; C. Smith, vice-president; D. H. Terry, secretary and treasurer.

The Local Cure.

Physical strength, cheerful spirits and the ability to enjoy life fully come only with a healthy body. The young man who suffers from nervous debility, insomnia, irritable temper, and the thousand and one derangements of the body, does not enjoy life as he ought. He feels tired, spiritless, and unfit for the work of life. To reach, reclaim and restore such to health and happiness is the aim of the Y. M. C. A. Gymnasium, on the corner of East Front street and Watchung avenue.

—The Camera Club will hold an adjourned meeting tomorrow evening to elect officers.

There is good reason for the popularity of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. Davis & Buzard, of West Monterey, Clarion Co., Pa., say: "It has cured people that our physicians could do nothing for; we persuaded them to try a bottle of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy and now they recommend it with the rest of us." 25 and 50c bottles for sale at Reynolds's Pharmacy, Park and North avenues. FIRE IN SOUTH PLAINFIELD.

Destruction of the Home of Murray Smith.

Murray W. Smith's pretty residence in South Plainfield is this morning a mass of smouldering ruins, nothing being saved from the wreck. The fire started at 1 this morning and was undoubtedly of incendiary origin as Mrs. Smith and the family have been absent on a visit for two weeks and Mr. Smith spent the night at the house of a friend. The fire was well under way when discovered, and little could be done but to confine it to the building in which it originated. The loss will approximate $4,000.

Great Work on the Alleys.

If anyone doubts for a moment that popular B. A. Hegeman, Jr., is a star of first magnitude at the bowling alleys, he should have seen the practice game on the Park Club alleys between Mr Hegeman and a well known athletic club member who "wears no moustache to deceive the eye", and who for obvious reasons shall be nameless.

The genial B. A. Jr., started at a gallop with two spares, and settling back in the harness at the quarter-pole rolled up eight strikes in quick succession never breaking once, and leading at the wire by one hundred pins. His score reached the comfortable total of 265, a record which is hard to beat.

Death of Michael Hurley.

The sad death of Michael, eldest son of Mr. and Mrs. James Hurley, occurred Saturday at the home of his parents in North Plainfield. For the past four years he had been studying for the priesthood and last summer when he returned from college he was not feeling very well, and did not go back in the Fall, thinking a rest would be beneficial.

Since that time his health had steadily declined until death relieved him of his suffering.

The funeral services will be held from his late home tomorrow morning at 8:30 and from St. Joseph's Church at 9:15. Father Miller will officiate. Interment will be in St. Mary's cemetery.

BY THE WAY.

—Important changes are made today in the time-tables of the Central and the Pennsylvania railroads.

—The members of the First Church of Christ are preparing to give an entertainment the last of this month.

—Sewer contractors are busily engaged in connecting the flush tank with the Woodland avenue end of the sewer pipe. It is thought that they will complete the work today.

—Joseph Blatz will soon break ground on the lot belonging to him adjoining the Arlington Hotel on Somerset street. Mr. Blatz's prospective house is to be completed by April 1.

—Marshal Pangborn of the borough has disposed of his 38-pound Century Columbia bicycle, and will appear on the borough streets in the Spring in all his glory in a new light Columbia.

—A prayer meeting will be held tonight at 8 in the Trinity Reformed Church, under the leadership of the Y. P. S. C. E. Tomorrow evening a meeting for men only will be held. Everybody is welcome.

—The appearance of the familiar Spring "to rent" signs again reminds Plainfield landlords of their annual hustle to get desirable tenants into their houses by April 1. There will be a great deal of moving this Spring.

—Early Sunday morning Edward White had a fire started in the furnace of his new store, and its smoke caused passers to suppose fire and send word to Chief Doane. The latter visited the place, and found his services were not needed.

—Following are preaching services at the Park Avenue Baptist Church Chapel, to which the public is invited: Monday evening, "What do you call your conversion?" Tuesday, "Do you understand?" Wednesday, "A perilous thing for anybody to do." Thursday, "The highest price."

—Westfield papers continue to laugh at Plainfield for burying thousands of dollars of pipe in the sewer trenches before providing an outlet and disposal plant so that the sewers can be put into service as fast as completed. Westfield is going ahead with her disposal plant and will then lay her pipes.

—Mrs. L. Cole, one of Plainfield's leading dressmakers, consenting to satisfy the wishes of her patrons, has leased a large room on the second floor of the Babcock Building, where she will soon be ready to receive orders and execute work in the most fashionable style and at prices to suit all.

Many stubborn and aggravating cases of rheumatism that were believed to be incurable and accepted as life legacies, have yielded to Chamberlain's Pain Balm, much to the surprise and gratification of the sufferers. One application will relieve the pain and suffering and its continued use insures an effectual cure. For sale at Reynolds's pharmacy, Park and North avenues. T. S. Armstrong, manager.

MAY HELP SILVER MEN

Senator Jones' New Financial Scheme.

Claimed That the President Will Give It His Sanction—All Notes Under $20 To Be Silver Certificates—Gold Men Properly Looked After—To Be Introduced To-Day.

Washington, Jan. 14.—Another financial scheme is to be presented to-day by Senator Jones. The senate and not the house is to be made the battle ground.

The proposed bill, it is said, gives what the gold standard men insist shall be given them, and gives the silver men, in a degree, at least, what they have been asking.

It is claimed that Mr. Jones has secured some assurances that the measure will have the sanction of the treasury department and of the president himself.

An increase of the use of silver is created in two sections which provide that all notes under the denomination of $20 shall be silver certificates. These sections will provide that no national bank notes shall be issued of a denomination less than $20, and all notes of national banks now outstanding, of a denomination less than $20 shall, as rapidly as possible, be taken up, redeemed and cancelled, and notes of $20 or higher denominations issued in their stead.

The secretary of the treasury will be authorized and directed out of the proceeds of the sale of bonds authorized, to cancel and destroy all greenbacks and treasury notes issued under the Sherman act of denominations less than $20, and to issue silver certificates in their stead, but not to a greater aggregate amount than the greenbacks and treasury notes and national bank notes, the withdrawal and cancellation of which are authorized; these silver certificates to be in denominations of $1, $2, $5, and $10, and to be payable in silver.

It is the intention under this proposed act that neither the treasury nor the national banks shall issue or keep in circulation any notes other than silver certificates of a less denomination than $20.

The secretary of the treasury is authorized, at the request of any holder of treasury notes or greenbacks, to issue in lieu thereof silver certificates for the same in certificates of a less denomination than $20.

The unlimited coinage of silver is provided for in a section which will read practically as follows:

The secretary of the treasury is authorized and directed to receive at any mint from any citizen of the United States silver bullion, the product of the mines of the United States, of standard weight, &c., and coin the same into standard silver dollars, and the seigniorage for the said coinage shall be the difference between the coinage value and the bullion value in London on the day of deposit, and the secretary of the treasury shall deliver to the owner of said bullion the silver dollars so coined, and the amount received from the seigniorage of said coinage shall be covered into the treasury.

THE DEFICIENCY BILL.

It May Be Disposed of During the Week.

Washington, Jan. 14. — It is confidentially expected here that the urgent deficiency bill be out of the way before the end of the week that opens in Congress to-day. There will be a number of speeches on the income tax from various republicans, but there will be no effort at undue delay nor will the republicans countenance filibustering. Despite the opposition of Mr. Quay, which has necessitated several roll calls, and the fight that Mr. Hill is making, as soon as the republicans have made the speeches arranged for, they will have a vote on the bill and will largely support the appropriation. Mr. Cockrell expects to see the vote taken by Wednesday, the bill will have at least fifty votes out of the total vote of eighty-five as the senate now stands.

The Nicaragua canal bill is still the unfinished business, the pension, military academy and the fortifications appropriation bills have been reported to the senate, and Mr. Cockrell expects to call them up as fast as possible. The canal bill, while retaining its right of way, will probably yield to the appropriation bills, when they are called up. The interest in the Senate this week will centre about the room of the finance committee rather than upon the proceedings of the floor with one exception. Mr. Gorman's promised speech on the financial question, which was to have been delivered on Saturday, but will probably come off to-day.

The programme of business to be considered in the house this week will probably be arranged at a meeting of the committee on rules to be held to-morrow. Two days are already appropriated—Monday, under the rules is devoted to the consideration of business relating to the District of Columbia, and Tuesday will be at least partly occupied with the consideration of the Indian appropriation bill. In the first morning hour devoted to committee business the Grout bill to make oleomargarine, butterine and other substitutes for and imitations of dairy product subject to the laws of the state into which they may be transported will come up and inevitably precipitate parliamentary contact. There remains but one hour for its consideration under the present call of committees, and opponents of the bill profess their ability to prevent its passage within that period. Should the bill fail to reach a final vote at this stage, Mr. Hatch will doubtless appeal to the committee on rules for a special assignment.

There is already a tremendous pressure being brought to bear upon the committee on rules for orders for the disposition of bills. Requests have been preferred on behalf of enough measures to take up all the remaining time of the session, save that which will be required for disposing of the appropriation bills and the bills called up in the morning hour by the several committees. Among those measures which according to a member of the committee on rules are likely to become the subject of favorable action by the committee on rules are the bills to provide payment of the French spoliation claims; to provide for the readjustment and refunding of the Pacific railroad indebtedness; to erect public buildings in accordance with the recommendations of the committee on buildings and grounds; to provide for the more speedy settlement of claims arising under the Bowman act; the free ship bill; and the bill providing for the reclassification and rearranging the salaries of postal clerks.

PANIC IN A CHURCH.

The Floor Gives Way at the Services Over a Murdered Man's Body.

New Haven, Conn., Jan. 14.—There was a panic in the Italian Catholic church at Brewery and Wooster streets, this city, yesterday, during the funeral services over the body of Rafaele Del Grego, who was murdered on Thursday evening last. The church was crowded and Father Beccherini had just arisen to perform the office for the dead, when there was a great break and a crushing noise—the floor of the church was giving way. Immediately there was a rush on the part of the people, and the scene was turned from one of solemnity to one of tumultuous activity. Women shrieked and some fainted, and the men, if anything, were less heroic.

There were four windows in the rear of the church, and through these, regardless of glass or sash, affrighted men, women and childrern went tumbling in a mad effort to escape. The doors, very small in size, were for a time blocked and finally were burst from their fastenings. During the excitement the priest shouted from the sanctuary to his people, telling them there was no danger, but his flock was deaf to his entreaties, thinking only of escape. It was something short of a miracle that in a place where there were so many packed that the injuries resulting from the panic are so few.

BRADFORD'S FIRE.

People Injured and Firemen Suffer from the Intense Cold.

Bradford, Pa., Jan. 14.—The fire that visited this city yesterday was a very destructive one. A blizzard was blowing and the weather was intensely cold. The firemen were greatly handicapped in fighting the flames. Miss Mary Callahan leaped from the second story of the Sheehan house and escaped with a broken ankle and arm. Mary Dorine had a similar experience, barring the broken bones. Mrs. McQuiston, residing over Smith's grocery, rushed down the stairs to Main street with her clothing on fire. The flames were quickly extinguished. She will recover. Many firemen had their hands and ears frozen. Robert Sisco had his hands and feet so badly frozen that he is in a serious condition. The fire started in the Sheehan house.

For a time the business portion of the town was threatened with destruction, but good work on the part of the fire department stopped further loss, which amounted to $150,000.

COLFAX'S GRAVE.

Only an Humble Slab Marks the Ex-Vice President's Resting Place.

South Bend, Ind., Jan. 14.—The grave of the late Schuyler Colfax in the city cemetery is unmarked, save by an humble slab bearing his initials. Yesterday was the tenth anniversary of his death. It is now proposed to pay further tribute to his memory by the erection of a public statute to mark his last resting place. The proposition has been advanced to raise the monument fund by public subscriptions, it being estimated that $10,000 will be required to erect an enduring monument. Mr. Colfax in his lifetime was prominent in the work of organization of Odd Fellows and their generous cooperation will be asked.

Aid for Nebraska.

Baltimore, Jan. 14.—Mr. R. H. Edmonds, who was the first to propose that the south should contribute a train load or more of provisions to suffering Nebraska, is advised that nearly a full train of rice, sugar, molasses and other state produce has been made up in Louisiana. Five or six New Orleans firms have each contributed a full car load from their wares. The train will leave this week. A train load of grain and meat, contributed by the people of Georgia, will leave Atlanta to-morrow.

Frozen on the Mountains.

Altoona, Pa., Jan. 14.—Mary Geesey, a demented woman, who was formerly an inmate of the Blair county almshouse but who had lately made her home with Seth Campwell, a farmer at the foot of Brush mountain, about four miles from this city, wandered away from her home during the storm and when found on the mountains was frozen to death.

To Purify Trenton.

Trenton, N. J., Jan. 14.—The agitation of the purification of Trenton has extended to nearly all the churches of the city. In the course of a few days a mass meeting of citizens will be held and steps taken to suppress the social evil and Sunday liquor selling.

WIDESPREAD POVERTY

Distressing State of Affairs in the Hocking Valley.

Miners' Officials Do Not Seem to Comprehend the Real Truth of the Reports—Gov. McKinley Calls Upon the People of Ohio to Come to Their Assistance.

Columbus, O., Jan. 14.—A gentleman who resides in the Hocking Valley, and is pretty familiar with the condition of the miners there, was here yesterday.

He says the miners have been in destitute circumstances for some time and that the matter was reported to the officials of the United Mine Workers, but they practically ignored the matter, probably because they did not comprehend the real truth.

When they failed to take action, the miners themselves appointed committees who for the last two months have been going quietly about the country soliciting aid, which they claimed was for Hocking Valley men who had lost their situations by reason of the strike on that road last summer.

This, the gentleman claimed, was done in order that the public might not know that the miners were in impoverished circumstances. The gentleman said he had heard it charged that the United Mine Workers of Illinois had advised that the matter be kept from the public, but he doubted the truth of this.

However, those officials are now being criticised for not taking an active interest in the matter since the condition of affairs has been made public.

So far as known they have not attempted to do anything for the benefit of the sufferers. He further says the destitution in the Sunday Creek Valley completely overshadows that in the Hocking Valley or in and about Nelsonville where the first appeal came from. He thinks the destitute there will have to be cared for till spring at least.

A newspaper man who has just returned from the scene says the destitution is widespread, and that no writer could draw a picture horrible enough to do the matter justice. He says it is impossible to conceive how such conditions could exist in a civilized country, and that it is a disgrace to the state of Ohio, which will not soon be blotted out.

In view of this fact, he thinks it is well the real conditions cannot be presented to the public. When he asked the miners how they would guard against such circumstances in the future, they almost invariably answered that they would work more and strike less.

The well-to-do citizens in the impoverished district charge that much of the suffering there can be traced to the drinking habit.

They say that many of the miners in prosperous times seem to have no other desire than to enrich the saloonkeepers, and make no attempt to prepare for adversity.

The better class of miners admit this is true in a great many instances, but the wives and children of such men—who are the real sufferers—are not responsible for this condition. But while these charges are made, those making them proclaim that this is not a time to inquire after cause. The effect alone must be considered.

Last night Gov. McKinley received a telegram from Chairman Coultrap of the relief committee at Nelsonville, urging that supplies be sent to Shawnee and Glouster at once, as well as to Nelsonville. Immediately the governor sent Mayor Blue, of Cleveland, the following telegram:

"There is much suffering for provisions and clothing among the miners of the Hocking Valley and Sunday Creek Valley of this state. It is of such a character that I feel constrained to call upon the generous people of Ohio to render assistance. The carload of supplies sent last week has been already exhausted. Columbus will send a carload to-night and Cincinnati will commence shipping her contributions to-morrow. Contributions can be either money, provisions or clothing. Can Cleveland be ready to ship supplies by Wednesday or otherwise contribute as it may deem best by that time? I will later indicate to what points the shipments should be made."

BROOKLYN'S RAILROAD STRIKE.

Probably Every Line in the City Will Be Tied-Up.

Brooklyn, N. Y., Jan. 14.—District Assembly 75 held a meeting last night behind closed doors. After the meeting Master Workman Connolly said that the tie-up would be called between four and five o'clock this morning. All the roads in Brooklyn will be tied-up with the exception of the Jay and Smith streets line. The master workman said that the executive committee had decided by a vote to allow Mr. Slocum, the president of the last named road until 9 o'clock to-day to accede to their demands. If he then refused a strike would also be ordered on his road.

Reforms for Armenia.

London, Jan. 14.—The Daily News correspondent in Constantinople says it is rumored that the porte is considering administrative reforms to be introduced in Armenia. Among these reforms would be the recruiting of the gendarmerie from the Christian as well as the Mussulman population, the appointment of a Mussulman governor for the first three-year term and Christian governors for all subsequent terms.

Bill Cook Captured.

Muskogee, I. T., Jan. 14.—A telegram was received here saying that Bill Cook had been captured at Fort Stanton, N. M. Although Cook was supposed to be with that part of his gang which has been camping in the neighborhood of Fort Gibson recently.

Will Support Her Claims.

St. Petersburg, Jan. 14.—The Novoe Vremya says in a leader on the eastern war: "If the friendly and peaceful representations of Russia's diplomacy be not considered, she will be compelled to support her claims on Corea with force of arms."

COULD HARDLY BREATHE.

Catarrh of the Nose, Throat, and Stomach—Life Made Miserable by Headaches, Pain and Cough.

Lida McCandless, No. 1230 South Thirty-fifth street, Philadelphia, in conversation with a reporter, said: "I had a very bad case of catarrh of the nose, throat and stomach, with frequent headaches, pain under the shoulder blades and a horrible cough. I had to keep my mouth constantly open day and night to breathe, and felt as miserable as one possibly could. I was advised to try Munyon's Catarrh Cure. I am happy to say that from the beginning I felt relieved and continued to grow better until now I am entirely well. I am so thankful that this remarkable remedy was ever discovered, and hope others will take advantage of my experience."

Have you Catarrh? Are you willing to investigate a treatment that cures Catarrh by removing the cause? If so ask your druggist for a 25c bottle of Catarrh Tablets. The Catarrh Cure will eradicate the disease from the system, and the Tablets will cleanse and heal the affected parts and restore them to a natural and healthful condition.

Munyon's Homœopathic Home Remedy Company, of Philadelphia, put up specifics for nearly every disease, which are sold by all druggists, mostly for 25 cents a bottle.

All that's Yellow is not Cottolene

There's hardly a housekeeper in the country but has heard of Cottolene the new vegetable shortening. It is a strictly natural product; composed only of clarified cotton seed oil, thickened for convenience in use, with refined beef suet, pure and sweet. So composed,

COTTOLENE

Was bound to win, and to drive out lard from the kitchens of the world. When housekeepers wish to get rid of the unpleasant features and results of lard, they should get Cottolene, taking care that they are not given cheap imitations with vegetable names, spuriously compounded to sell in the place of Cottolene.

It's easy to avoid disappointment and ensure satisfaction. Insist on having Cottolene.

CANAL TRANSPORTATION.

Old-fashioned Methods that Must Eventually Give Way.

New York State has the most extensive canal system of any State in the Union. In view of the efforts that have been made to get its main water way, the Erie Canal, which extends from New York to Buffalo, under the protection of the national government, the conclusions of Superintendent Hannan in his last report are of interest. He says that navigation during the season has been maintained with scarcely any interruption. The number of tons carried on the canals during the season was 3,882,550, as follows: Erie Canal, 3,144,144 tons; Champlain, 550,279; Black River, 56,023; Oswego, 98,843; Cayuga and Seneca, 33,270. This tonnage was made up as follows: Product of the forest, 872,601 tons; agriculture, 1,412,142; manufactures, 87,241; merchandise, 352,741; other articles, 1,157,835. Of the total tonnage 2,818,254 tons were shipped east and 1,064,306 tons went west.

Comparing the season of 1894 with that of 1893, there is found to be a loss of tonnage amounting to 449,403 tons. The past season's tonnage is the smallest that has been transported upon the canals any year since 1859, and is the result, the superintendent says, of various causes, the principal ones being the general stagnation of business which occurred during the past year and the inadequacy of the canals to successfully compete with the railroads for this carrying trade. The superintendent says:

"The time is fast approaching when operation of the canals in a practical manner must cease unless the canals are improved, for practical operation cannot continue unless the business done thereon can be done at a profit to the boatmen. That the people favor canal improvement was abundantly demonstrated at the recent election. It is clearly evident that the duty of the Legislature will be to provide the measures for construction of largest possible canals, intended for the navigation for boats of such construction as will be able to navigate the inland waters of this State, discharging and receiving their cargoes at Buffalo and New York or other intermediate points, bearing always in mind the necessity for a full and free supply of water for the navigation thereon, a careful research for the damages that may possibly occur to adjacent property in consequence of such enlargement, and with a view to the most economical method by which such a waterway may be constructed."

A GOOD NIGHT ALARM CLOCK.

Of Assistance to Young Men Who Find It Hard to Take Their Departure.

A young man stood in the portico of an apartment house in Washington Park, Brooklyn, the other evening, and on the step above him stood a pretty girl. It was late and the street was deserted. Despite the darkness it was apparent to the occasional passer-by that the young man had the daintily gloved right hand of the young woman within his own, while his left hand rested over it like a cover to keep it guarded. The young man was apparently trying to say good night and the young woman could not hear him, for she was bending her head close to his. They stood in that attitude for nearly fifteen minutes, and might have been discovered in the same pose by the gray dawn of the morning had not something intervened.

That something was round and bright and it came out of a six story window. It descended slowly, the moonlight shining on its silvery surface and making it conspicuous.

Soon it could be seen that it was on a string and was being lowered by an elderly woman. When it dangled over the portico there was a sudden—bur—r—r—r—r—ring, and the young man and young woman parted like an overstrained hawser. The young man seized the round and bright object which was still ringing and held its face to the electric light. The hands on the alarm clock were clasped at midnight. He raised his hat to the young woman, murmured two words in a low tone and disappeared. The alarm clock was hoisted up quickly, but the young woman was up stairs before it finally reached the open window.

Quartz Fibres Are the Finest Made.

The finest fibres said to have been ever made have been spun by Prof. Boys out of quartz. This highly refractory substance, which requires to melt it a temperature greater than that developed in any furnace, when softened by the intense heat of the oxhydrogen blow-pipe, may be drawn out into threads of incredible fineness. Prof. Boys manipulates it by using a cross-bow arrangement, by which a straw, used as an arrow, carrying a small bit of quartz rod, is joined to another rod of quartz by melting the point of contact. When the straw arrow is fired from the cross-bow it draws out the quartz into a thread which may be made of almost any desired thickness, of any uniform diameter, and remarkably strong, considering the fineness.

Fibres of 1-15,000 of an inch in diameter have been made, 100 of which only equal in size the thickness of a single silkworm's thread, and the ends as they are drawn out become so fine that they cannot be seen, even with the aid of the most powerful microscope, and are not thicker than the millionth of an inch. A single cubic inch of quartz would supply sufficient thread to go around the world no fewer than 658 times—in other words, the length would be 16,450,000 miles.

What Gave Him Courage.

She (tenderly)—Tell me, dearest, what emboldened you to propose? How did you guess that I loved you, darling?

He—To be frank with you, love, your papa intimated that if I didn't mean to do business after coming to see you for two years I had better clear out and let some other fellow have a chance.—London Judy.

Why Didn't He Care.

First Boy—Teacher is goin' to keep you in after school, ain't she?

Second Boy—Yes, but I don't care.

First Boy—Why not?

Second Boy—Mother said I'd got to come straight home quick as I got out.—Good News.

"It would be in you," said Hicks, "but it's family pride with Parker. He comes of old colonial stock.—Pick-Me-Up.

A SLAP AT BURNS.

SOME HOMELY TRUTHS CONCERNING OUR FOREIGN CRITICS.

Millionaire Rend of Chicago Objects to Coddling Foreigners Who Mingle their Flattery of this Country with Malignant Criticism, and then Sell the Product.

John Burns, the English labor leader, was invited to attend the joint convention of the coal miners and mine owners at Pittsburg. When Burns appeared on the floor of the Common Council Chamber, where the convention was held, Col. W. P. Rend, the millionaire coal operator, of Chicago, said:

"Mr. Chairman, I object to the courtesies of this convention being extended to Mr. Burns, who is here for the double purpose of discussing labor matters and also of slandering and vilifying American institutions. Mr. Burns is a stranger in America. It is therefore befitting that he shall observe the decencies and proprieties of the position he occupies. These proprieties he is constantly violating by his malignant attacks upon our institutions. I would advise Mr. Burns to return to the country from which he came and criticise the customs, manners and institutions of his own land, which he will find infinitely more deserving of his criticism and abuse than anything he can find here.

"I know it is the custom of the 'blarsted Britishers' to indulge in improprieties similar to those against which I protest in the case of Mr. Burns. These people indulge in a certain amount of praise, but mix with it abuse, a proceeding which is the meanest and worst form of vilification. It is about time for American manhood to resent the offensive conduct of these men. I have no objection whatever to listening to the views of Mr. Burns upon labor matters or sociology. My protest is simply directed against a glaring abuse that has become in this country intolerable. When Mr. Stead came to Chicago he was taken by the hand by many of our leading citizens. He also abused the hospitality of our city and the proprieties of good breeding by indulging in criticism of American matters, in which he mingled much of flattery but more of hostile criticism. At that time I predicted that he would return to England and imitate the example of other foreign adventurers by writing slanderous books about our country. It is time to stop lionizing characters of this kind."

The speech fell like a bomb shell in the convention. It was not the kind of reception Burns had expected and he seemed stunned. As he was not a delegate he could not reply.

HE WAS HIS OWN PHRENOLOGIST.

It Cost Him Nothing Except Some Good-Natured Guying.

A man stood in front of a window on Sixth avenue a few evenings ago with his hat off. The crowd passing by noticed that he was intently studying something in the window, and at the same time feeling and rubbing his head. Some of the pedestrians stopped and watched the man and the object of his study. Pasted on the plate-grass was a phrenological chart, the various bumps being plainly outlined and labelled. The head in the chart was supplied with every bump and indentation conceivable to the most imaginative phrenologist.

Regardless of the crowd he was attracting, the man gazed bareheaded at the chart, now and then leaning over to study more closely the lines and figures, all the while testing his own skull. At a low estimate fifty persons watched the amateur phrenologist acquiring a cheap knowledge of his cranium by electric light.

"Wonder what he is?" remarked a bystander. "Say, partner, hit it yet?" put in another. "Get a plaster cast." "Go get your head shaved first, you'll feel better." "Oh, pay the man 50 cents and get a certificate," and many other similar quips were hurled at the man, but he never heard. At last some one asked him what office he was running for. He turned, saw the crowd of amused people, jammed his hat on his head and stole sheepishly away.—N. Y. Advertiser.

BILLIARDIST IVES IS WILLING.

He Will Play Schaefer Any Kind of a Game, but It Must Be for $5,000 a Side.

Frank C. Ives, in answer to Schaefer's reply to his challenge, makes the following statement:

"Schaefer wanted me to go on an exhibition trip with him, and although I was not anxious to do it, I agreed to go. However, if he thinks I am going on a long, fatiguing trip to California and play a match game for the world's championship at the end of it, he is mistaken.

FRANK C. IVES.

"If he wants to play a cushion carrom game, or any other kind of a game, I will accommodate him, although I do not think there is any good reason why I should. My game is the fourteen-inch balk line, and I do not see why I should be expected to meet all comers in any other game, any more than Jim Corbett should be expected to accept a challenge to wrestle. Just the same, I am willing to meet Schaefer in any game he may propose, provided it is for not less than $5,000 a side. I will bet $250 that Schafer won't put up $5,000.

Matrimonial Item.

Mother—Now that you are about to get married, I want to give you a few pointers that will be useful to you.

Daughter—Yes, mamma.

Mother—Of course, you and your husband will fight, but remember, when you throw anything at him, to choose something that will not break and is cheap. You must learn to be economical.—Texas Siftings.

LIKE A BEAVER'S RETREAT.

A Moonshiner's Den that Could be Entered Only by Diving.

There is a small island in the Pee Dee River, in Richmond county, North Carolina, about the size of a ten acre field. The ground is studded with large cypress trees, and the undergrowth of bushes and briars is almost impenetrable. None of the land has ever been cultivated, because it is very difficult to get to the island, and wild hogs and wild cattle, coons and "varmints" of various kinds alone inhabit it. Ever since the making of corn into whiskey was forbidden during the war there has been a moonshine distillery on this island. It has been raided many times by the revenue officers without discovering the "blockade plant."

The festive moonshiner has been seen to land on the island, but his retreat has never been discovered, and the officers have probed the earth for a cave or underground retreat without success.

Last week Deputy Collector E. E. Moffitt and several raiders occupied this island in the night time and picketed themselves so that no one could arrive or leave without being seen.

About daylight a canoe occupied by two men and containing several five-gallon kegs was seen approaching the island from the Richmond County shore. Deputy Moffitt gave orders for them to be allowed to land and to observe their movements. As soon as the landing was made, J. R. McRae, who has been suspected of running the still on the island, sunk the kegs in the river near where the canoe landed.

This movement was not understood by Moffitt, but his surprise was unbounded when McRae and his companions began to disrobe themselves. After they had stripped off all their clothes and placed them in the hollow trunk of a cypress tree, McRae plunged headforemost in the river and disappeared from view. His companion performed the same feat. The revenue officer and his force waited all day for the reappearance of McRae and companion.

About sundown McRae and four men suddenly rose up out of the water at the lower landing.

Clothes were found for all of them in a tree near the river bank, and they dressed in less than four minutes. A long pole with an iron hook on the end was then carried from among the underbrush and leaves, and with this a dozen five-gallon kegs of whiskey were soon brought out of the water and placed in the canoes. As soon as they were loaded they paddled across to the Richmond side.

Moffitt from the rendezvous had seen all this. That the moonshiners' still was under the ground was certain. The moonshiners had been in and out of it, but how did they get in and out of it? This was the question. Finally one of the men, of the name of Oxendine, said he would try to solve the mystery if Moffitt would agree. Consent was given, and Oxendine soon denuded himself of his clothing and jumped into the river headforemost at the same place where he had seen McRae go in and come out. The raiders waited for the return of their fellow raider, and had grown very uneasy at his prolonged absence, as he had been told to return in half an hour.

An hour passed without his reappearance, and they were discussing what next to do, when Oxendine popped up out of the water blowing like a porpoise. He was quickly reinvested with his clothes, and then sat down by the camp fire and gave an explanation of the mystery.

When he plunged into the water he made his way toward the bank, keeping his eyes open while under the water. He is an expert swimmer and diver, and after going about twenty feet under water and toward the bank he rose upward and found his head out of water and in an opening.

He stopped swimming and felt for the bottom, and found that he was in water about five feet deep. He walked on, and was soon out of the water but in total darkness. He crawled along some distance until he discovered the live coals of a fire. He made his way to this fire, and had not seen any person nor heard any noise. He waited and listened, but everything was perfectly still. He then made up a light with wood found near the fire, and found himself in a well-appointed moonshine distillery.

The cave or tunnel was twenty feet wide and twelve feet high. Overhead the earth was held up by large cypress logs and the side was planked up. The water for the still was brought from the river through a rubber hose. Oxendine followed the tunnel to the other end and found it similar in arrangements to the place where he had entered. He then made his way back with a light, and when he got to the water he waded until he came to a log across the tunnel, which was embedded on both sides of the bank and which touched the water. Oxendine dived under the log and immediately rose up and found himself in the river in front of his companions.

Great was the astonishment when Oxendine had concluded his narrative. He also stated that there were several hundred gallons of whiskey in the tunnel, and that smoke from the fire appeared to pass up into a hollow cypress tree, but the officers could not see any smoke.—Philadelphia Press.

The Master Passion Strong O'er Death.

Kirke La Shelle told me a story a few weeks ago which pleased Henry Clay Barnabee so much that he proposes to tell it as his very own.

It is a story illustrative of the undying master passion of the actor. An actor who plays juvenile roles met a leading man on Broadway. The leading man was dressed in deep black. There was a wide band of crape on his hat, and he had discarded the patent leather shoes an actor loves for shoes with a subdued polish that spoke of grief.

"What is the matter?" asked the juvenile.

"My father is dead," answered the leading man in a heartbroken voice.

The juvenile expressed his sympathy.

"When did he die?" he asked.

"Last week. We buried him to day—a nice funeral," answered the heartbroken voice.

"Large attendance?" asked the juvenile.

A smile of enthusiastic delight flashed over the mourner's face.

"Large attendance!" he cried. "My boy, we turned them away."—Washington Post.

He'd a dreamy, far-off look in his eyes,
Such a wholly unconscious air,
While the busy conductor passed along—
A poet he was, you'd swear—
But no—he was only trying to look
As if he had paid his fare.

CITY EDITION, 4 O'CLOCK.

PLAINFIELD, N. J., JAN. 14, 1895

FOR PLAINFIELD'S PROGRESS.

Shot at His Post In the Bayou Teche.

The battle of the Bayou Teche, Jan. 14, 1863, was the beginning of a series of encounters in the Red river country. A gunboat fleet under Lieutenant Thomas McKean Buchanan, having on board a detachment of infantry led by General Wetzel, advancing up the bayou from Brashear City, was met on the 14th by obstructions in the channel formed from a demolished bridge, a sunken steamboat and submarine torpedoes. Above the obstruction the Confederate gunboat Cotton kept guard, supported by the guns of Fort Bisland and riflemen on shore.

Buchanan steamed up to the obstructions and opened fire, disregarding the torpedoes, of which he had been warned by a negro. The Cotton, an ironclad with a powerful battery of guns in casemates, and the Confederate sharpshooters on shore maintained a rapid fire upon the vessels, but the gallant young commander kept his place on the bridge of the flagship until he was shot dead by a marksman in the rifle pits.

Meanwhile Wetzel's troops had landed and opened from along shore upon the Cotton. A handful of volunteers of the Seventy-fifth New York dashed forward in the face of the fire from the enemy's pits, and gaining shelter on the banks cut down every man in sight upon the Confederate, completely silencing her guns. To avoid their deadly marksmanship the Cotton steamed out of range for a time, but returned to the attack and was again silenced by the intrepid New Yorkers, re-enforced by volunteers from the Eighth Vermont. She again retired, repeating the maneuver with the same result. At the third retreat of the gunboat the Confederate land forces abandoned their works. The Cotton was then deserted and set on fire.

GEORGE L. KILMER.

The short serials copyrighted from the pens of the best authors to the service of The Daily Press continue to delight lovers of good stories and the best literature.

The World is already scenting gubernatorial news of the next November campaign. In its Union County gossip it says:

"Ex-Congressman John Kean, Jr., will make a bold bid again this Fall for the Governorship despite all the talk about Senator Foster M. Voorhees for the place Senator Voorhees would undoubtedly like to be the Gubernatorial candidate, and a very popular one he would make. Those who know Senator Voorhees best declare he will not be an obstacle to Mr. Kean's ambition, and the latter makes no secret of the fact that he would like once more to test the temper of the people of New Jersey at the ballot-box.

"The ex Congressman thinks the election this year will be a walkover for whoever gets the Republican nomination. It is rumored that in the event of Mr. Kean's nomination and election Senator Voorhees, who was his righthand man in the former campaign and will in all probability occupy the same place as his trusty lieutenant if he again heads the Republican ticket, will be well taken care of by his chief.

The recent appointment by President Cleveland of Herbert Wolcott Bowen as Consul-General of Barcelona, Spain, has been confirmed by the Senate. Mr. Bowen was for some years a resident of Netherwood, and has many warm friends in this city. He is a younger brother of Henry E. Bowen of Watchung avenue. The Brooklyn Eagle, referring to his appointment, says:

"The appointment of Herbert Wolcott Bower, now the Consul of Barcelona, Spain, to be Consul-General at that point, will give to him supervision of all the consulates of the United States in that country, and is a promotion which carries merit as well as distinction, propriety as well as power with it. Mr. Bowen is the son of Henry C. Bowen of this city, the owner and editor of the New York Independent. The Consul-General was born in Brooklyn some forty years ago, and followed a graduation from Yale University with an extended study of languages and of international regulations. He is a fine French, German and Spanish scholar, as well as a master of English style. His entrance into the service of his country was effected by President Harrison, who made him Consul at Barcelona, where President Cleveland has continued him and where his excellent discharge of his duties has brought this promotion to him. He is in no sense a politician, but in the best sense of the word a public servant who has the confidence of all business men, being himself a business man, and who has won the esteem of Americans abroad by his effective and hearty endeavors for their comfort, as well as the confidence and approbation of the State Department by the interesting and accurate character of his reports. His popularity, both official and personal alike with Democrats and Republicans and with all classes of political opinion, is an incident which commends his appointment and causes it to give satisfaction to not a small number of personal friends. Aside from this, however, the reform principle which his appointment and promotion express is an extremely agreeable and hopeful fact to those who would raise the consular and diplomatic service above and out of the capricious and leveling play of partisan politics."

The argument started in The Daily that the printing of the Common Council should be done in Plainfield by the newspaper establishments which pay Plainfield taxes and Plainfield labor and which are working every day for Plainfield's good, has attracted the attention and approval of the State. The Elizabeth Journal champions the cause in the following manner:

"The Plainfield papers and members of the Republican City Council are at odds about the city printing. The Councilmen want to print certain reports in pamphlet for general distribution, and want to have the Plainfield printers compete with New York printers for the work. The Councilmen are in the wrong. The New York printers do nothing for Plainfield, while the Plainfield printers do everything they can for that city, and are entitled to the work at reasonable rates. But the pamphlet form nonsense is the worst feature of the whole controversy Whenever an official gets a spasm of economy or wants to get square with some newspaper he proposes to print the official minutes in pamphlet form. It is the most extravagant way possible of wasting public money. The newspapers are the people's own chosen sources of information on all current topics, and especially on public matters and official proceedings, and the best way, the proper way, the economical way, and the only reasonable and common sense way to make public the official doings, is to publish them in the newspapers and pay for them at fair rates. Pamphlets are read by very few, and it is a waste to print them; papers are read by everybody. The sooner the Plainfield Councilmen conclude that Plainfield business should be transacted wholly in Plainfield, and not in New York, the sooner they will return to that wisdom which, as Republicans, they are so generally credited with possessing."

Scriptural Stereopticon.

The Y. P. S. C. E. of the Congregational Church held a special service last evening which was thoroughly enjoyed by all who were present.

Rev. C. L. Goodrich read selections from the Scriptures following the life of Christ while appropriate pictures were thrown on the screen with a stereopticon. During the service Miss M G. Morse and Miss E. A. Whiting sang the familiar hymn "The Ninety-and-Nine." At the close a series of pictures representing the "Rock of Ages" were displayed while Miss Morse and Miss Whiting sang the hymn of that name very effectively.

They Are Given Preference by the High School Students—Other Notes.

Miss Grace E Overton of the Junior class and a pupil of Miss Addie Parker Jackson, recited a selection from Mark Twain's "Tom Sawyer" in Assembly Hall this morning It was of a humorous nature and so skilfully and realistically rendered that the undivided attention of her audience was held throughout. Miss Overton shows herself an adept at elocution, and promises, under the careful training of Miss Jackson, to become one of the shining lights of the art.

The vote on the school colors took place this morning after opening exercises. As no one color secured a majority of the votes, the three highest will be voted upon Wednesday morning. The vote was as follows: Light blue and black 62; red and dark blue 32; purple and white 15; brown and yellow 8; brown and light blue 7; brown and white 7; green and pink 2; maroon and steel gray 1.

The principal objections against light blue and black are the using of black bunting for decorating the High School building its use on the athletic field. The contest will certainly be very close.

Marvelous Results.

From a letter written by Rev. J. Gunderman, of Dismondale, Mich., we are permitted to make this extract: 'I have no hesitation in recommending Dr. King's New Discovery, as the results were almost marvelous in the case of my wife. While I was pastor of the Baptist Church at Rives Junction she was brought down by pneumonia succeeding la grippe. Terrible paroxysms of coughing would last hours with little interruption and it seemed as if she could not survive them. A friend recommended Dr. King's New Discovery; it was quick in its work and highly satisfactory in results. Sold by L. W. Randolph druggist. Regular size 50c and $1; our price 45c and 90c

REMOVAL.

Dr. Lighthill begs leave to give notice that he has removed to

NO. 132 CRESCENT AVE.

(a few doors from his former location) where he can be consulted on all chronic diseases of whatever name and nature.

Dr. Lighthill refers with pardonable pride to the success of his practice in Plainfield and submits below a few of the many testimonials which he has received from grateful patients. A mass of similar ones can be seen at his office.

AN ALMOST MIRACULOUS CURE.

The Statement of Mr. Edward Teel, Jr., of Dunellen, N. J.

TO THE PUBLIC:

From a sense of duty I desire to call public attention to the almost miraculous cure which Dr. Lighthill effected in the case of my wife. For eleven years she had been afflicted with piles of an unusual severe and distressing character. She suffered every day of her life the most intense pain, attended with frequent and profuse hemorrhage. This state of things debilitated her entire system until she became a perfect wreck of her former self.

We made every effort to obtain a cure but they all resulted in bitter disappointment, although a number of physicians of excellent reputations for skill in that direction had treated her case. She grew worse and worse all the time, the pain became perfectly unbearable and I felt she could not bear the strain of her condition much longer. In this extremity, a friend of mine, Mr. W E. Dilts, a resident of Roselle, N. J., a passenger conductor on the New Jersey Central told me that he had been similarly affected, and had been permanently cured by Dr. Lighthill, after other medical skill had failed. He assured me that the doctor would cure my wife, no matter how severe her case may be, and his prediction proved perfectly correct. In spite of her desperate condition, Dr. Lighthill, I am glad to say, has effected a complete and perfect cure in her case, and has given her new life.

Since the cure has been effected she has gained in health and strength and is so improved in appearance that her friends scarcely recognize her. They all consider her cure as almost miraculous, and Dr. Lighthill's praise is heard on every side Our gratitude to Dr. Lighthill is unbounded and we only hope that other sufferers may be benefited by this publication.

EDWARD TEEL, JR.

A Flattering Testimonial from Colonel John Dietrich, One of Plainfield's Oldest and Best Known Residents.

16 ARLINGTON PLACE,
Plainfield, N. J., July 17, 1894

I am profoundly grateful to Dr. Lighthill for his speedy and radical cure of a most painful malady of over ten years standing with which I was afflicted.

I deem it proper to say to all afflicted to place themselves under the care of this skilful physician and be permanently cured.

I will cheerfully impart any information I possess when called upon.

JOHN DIETRICH.

Mr. Thomas Callahan of No. 214 Richmond street Cured of a Very Distressing Trouble by Dr. Lighthill.

PLAINFIELD, N. J., June 1, 1894.

TO THE PUBLIC:

For some time past I have been greatly distressed with noises in the head. They were all over my head and troubled me constantly; they were loudest at night when everything was quiet and at such times would often keep me from sleep and disturb my rest. In fact they got to be so bad and distressing that they affected my whole nervous system as well as my health. I did not obtain the least relief until I placed myself under the care of Dr. Lighthill, of No. 132 Crescent avenue, who effected a complete cure in my case in a short time and made me a very happy man.

THOMAS CALLAHAN,
214 Richmond street.

A Card From Mr. T. R VanZandt,

of Nos. 304 and 306 Park ave.,
Plainfield, N. J

I certify with pleasure that Dr. Lighthill has effectually cured me of a most painful case of piles. For some time past I had been subject to its attacks, but the last attack was so exceedingly painful that it completely upset my whole system. The pain extended to my legs and in many other directions, and made me so nervous that I could neither sleep, sit down, lie down or move about without serious discomfort and distress. Such was my condition when I applied to Dr. Lighthill for relief, and I am glad to say that as soon as he took hold of my case, I began to improve, and in a short time found myself completely cured. Dr. Lighthill has also effected a radical and permanent cure in a most terrible case of piles on my cousin, Mr J. V. Z. Grigg, of Rocky Hill, N. J., whose flattering testimonial is in Dr. Lighthill's possession.

Closing Railroad Shops.

Connellsville, Pa., Jan. 14.—Orders were received from the general manager's office of the Baltimore & Ohio railroad to close the company's shops at this place until Feb. 1. A Bad Break.

Braddock, Pa., Jan. 14.—By the breaking of the billet shears in the Bloom mill of the Edgar Thomson steel works, 2,000 men were thrown idle until the break can be repaired. The shears cut billets 8 by 8 in size and is a very costly piece of machinery.

French Ministers Resigning.

Paris, Jan. 14.—M. Barthou, minister of public works, has resigned, and it it rumored that other resignations are probable.

Instinct and Reason.

The Cincinnati Enquirer tells this story to prove that the instinct of self-preservation is stronger than reason: A man on a Lake Huron steamer had the only specimen of black rattlesnake I have ever met with. It was about the size of an ordinary garter snake and as vicious as Satan. It was confined in a strong box covered with thick plate glass. When anyone would touch the glass with his finger the snake would strike the underside opposite the finger as quickly as a stroke of lightning. The experimenter would always jerk away as suddenly. There was not a man on board, however muscular and free from nervousness, who could keep his finger to the glass when the snake would strike, although knowing that it could not possibly touch him. Strong men would try it again and again, certain of their ability to endure the test, but with the same result.
